

Today What's the Biggest Thing? Enough of War. One Healthy Baby. Fighters Old at 40. By ARTHUR BRISBANE

How big is the biggest thing in the universe? It would be like a grain of dust compared with a tennis ball. If Belgium were hollow, our sun might be at the center, and the earth, more than 90,000,000 miles away from the sun, might sail around inside of hollow Belgium without touching the wall of that great star.

"Another war" the labor members of England had when it was announced that England had declared war on Russia.

That cry "another war" the protest of English labor against England's attitude to Russia, means that English labor has had enough fighting for the present.

Ordinarily what labor wants or thinks seems comparatively unimportant to those that govern. But when it comes to war no country can ignore labor, since men that do the work in peace have to do 80 per cent of the work in war.

The English government knows how British labor feels about more fighting, hence the effort to keep out of war at almost any cost—even humiliation.

Standard Oil is composed of many little babies, born when the big company was chopped up by the government "killing the trust."

Today Mr. Jess Willard, 40 years old and more, will fight Mr. Floyd Johnson, a 22-year-old Scandinavian. Their contest will be watched with interest by those not interested in prize fighting.

At the same time the athletic world will find out how much fighting energy a man can retain after 40.

George Harvey has returned from England feeling quite well. The Russians are indignant because their representative at Lausanne was murdered and they want some kind of revenge and satisfaction from Switzerland.

"Defeat Curzon," Battle Cry of Red Hordes in Moscow

Volcano of Revolution Simmering in Russia—Commissioner of War Trotsky Pleads for Peace.

By Universal Service. Moscow, May 13.—The soviet commune was sweeping "through the streets of Moscow crying: 'Down with Curzon! Death to the initiators of a new war! Down with fascism! Russia is not a colony of England!'"

When Trotsky, commissar for war, appeared, the marching and slinging reds received him with a great demonstration. "We want peace. Cursed be he amongst us who contemplates aggressive warfare. The Russian workman does not understand an offensive, unmathematical, anything opposing peace and labor reconstruction."

Will Fight if Driven. "We will fight if driven to war, but it would be a terrible war, lasting many years and exhausting us completely. Therefore we say we want peace."

Ominous Clouds on Horizon. "There are ominous clouds on the horizon. Perhaps while I am talking here a telegram has arrived, telling of the beginning of naval operations against us in the White sea."
