Another qualification is that though the heart is out of the fighting there still will be a good deal of spasmodic trouble from detached young men who for several years have had no occupation but arms and now find it difficult to adapt themselves to more humdrum pursuits, or, indeed, to find jobs at all. Add to this that some of the personal bitterness aroused through the civil war may express itself in violent reprisals on individuals.

Still another qualification is that though the new free state government now is going to be free of the harassments of civil war and has clearly turned the corner toward stability, it has ahead of it a body of stern problems-economic, diplomatic 'ry to cover in a future article.

All Europe "Coming Back."

A final observation, appropriate here, is that what has happened in Ireland is what is happening hope fully in the rest of Europe. Europe is, in our phrase, slowly "coming back," and coming back chiefly through the aggregate of the efforts of the peasant farmers, who have ceased to look to governments and statesmen, or to think about them: but have gone to work, adding a cow or two to their herds, and a few sheep to their flocks, buying a better plow, and otherwise, in the mass, restoring the real economic wealth of Europe, in ways so clear that they would be perceptible from day to day
