Problems That Perplex

Is She in Love? Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 19 and have been going out with a young man of 22. He has asked me to take an engagement ring from him. Now, Miss Fairfax, I can say that I love this man very much and feel that he is the one to be my life partner, but at various times I have a feeling that I do not love him.

Can it be possible that this is what you call true love? Is it true that all people feel the same way and that true love only comes after marriage or engagement? I would like very much to receive this ring from him, but I want to make sure he is the right man. I go out with different men at different times, but can't say that I'd miss them, whereas I would miss this young man. ANXIOUS. Don't think so much about the ring. It is not the important question. What counts is whether you are in love with love, fascinated by the idea of being engaged, or truly devoted to the man. No one else can decide this for you. Stop and think of all the realities and duties of a marriage partnership. If you want to make this man happy and trust him with all your heart and respect him besides, your love is likely to have wearing qualities. The Slighted Lover. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 29 and in love with a man two years my senior. For the past few months his love seemed to grow cold toward me. I do not know the reason why. I have written him and received no reply. He called at my home within the past week one evening and talked to the rest of the family, but turned a cold shoulder toward me. Please tell me how to win him back. SICK AT HEART. The fact that the man called at your home and was at such pains to ignore you, shows that he is displeased with you—and wants you to know it. Probably he never got your letter. Moreover he is fancying himself slighted in some way. Don't take this seriously, but ask him in a natural, friendly manner what has caused him to act as if some dark cloud were eclipsing your friendship.

ADVERTISING. No Wonder Women Are Enthusiastic Read What They Say About This Glacier Clay

New York Sunday newspapers are giving much space to a remarkable Glacier Clay. Those who have used it say there is nothing to compare with it. One writer on beauty says: "I hesitate to write the truth about this wonderful natural aid to beauty for fear my readers will think I am exaggerating. When you consider the history of Glacier Clay and how it was made, you must realize that facts are the basis for my enthusiasm.

"The origin of Glacier Clay dates back ages and ages. We do not know all the story. But we do know that when the glaciers covered what is now Minnesota, perfect mineral ingredients were ground and sifted, separated and powdered, milled and refined, packed and stored away for centuries in nature's own laboratory, to await discovery and use by the charming women of today. "Glacier Clay is truly different from any other complexion beautifier. All natural refined clays are good for the skin, but Glacier Clay is so delicate and superfine that I prefer it to any other. It pulls impurities from the pores of the skin, heals and soothes chaps and pimples, cleanses and refreshes, banishes blackheads and blemishes, softens and refines, firms the flesh and gives a glory to the skin that only Glacier Clay can give. "And—best of all—it dries quickly, so very quickly that Glacier Clay can be applied in a quarter to one-half the time required for other clays. It sells for a dollar a jar, a low price for an article of such merit. I predicted Glacier Clay would be the greatest selling toilet article of the year, and druggists and toilet counter attendants tell me my prediction is coming true."
