

Gutzon Borglum Air Enthusiast; in Omaha for Day

Noted Sculptor, Here for Wedding, Charges Clique Has Been Retarding Progress in Flying.

Gutzon Borglum, noted sculptor, here for the wedding of his niece, Miss Dorothy Darlow, spent the day visiting boyhood scenes and meeting old friends.

He is a man of decided views and he doesn't "mince words." Although one of the leading sculptors of the world, he takes an active interest in national politics and aeronautics.

"I am a republican," he said, "but I do my own thinking."

Here are some of his terse statements on current topics: "Our soldier boys were killed like flies during the war because of defective airplanes."

"John Larsen, the airplane builder, was dishonestly treated in the air race held in Omaha in 1921. 'The Liberty' engine, and its building, was at the bottom of all of the aeronautic scandal following the war."

Clique Charged. "A clique of big manufacturers of airplanes is retarding the development and progress of flying because of its selfish desire to control airplane building."

"It is inconceivable that Mr. Larsen is guilty of the charges made that he set fire to his airplane hangar in New York in order to collect insurance. Mr. Larsen is a rich man and doesn't need the money."

Mr. Larsen, who is well known in Omaha, and Mr. Borglum are very close friends.

Mr. Borglum was an investigator for former President Wilson into the alleged government aeronautic scandals.

To Stump Against Preus. The mysterious lure of politics and the love for principle is taking him from his great work on Stone Mountain to Minnesota, where he will "stump" the state against J. A. O. Preus, one of the candidates for senator, Mr. Borglum said.

"I am going to be interested in politics until I die," he said.

The noted sculptor arrived here last night to attend the wedding of his niece, Miss Dorothy Darlow, daughter of Mrs. Alfred Darlow, to Robert R. Froyer, Omaha attorney.

Family Here Also. He was accompanied from Atlanta, Ga., where he is carving a bas-relief on the side of Stone Mountain, by his wife and two children, Lincoln, 11, and Mary Ellis, 7.

"I favor such men as Howell and Norris of Nebraska," said Mr. Borglum.

Burgess Bedtime Stories

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

A Brave and Clever Little Mother. There's a man on earth no one above. That's greater than a mother's love.

Up the Lone Little Path shuffled Mother Bear, and behind her, running from one side to the other, were her three cubs. Safe himself where in an instant he could pop into a hole under a great stump, Peter Rabbit now thought of Mrs. Grouse and her twelve babies. He knew that Mrs. Grouse was safe enough, for she could take to her stout wings. But what about these darling little babies? He knew that they were hiding under the brown leaves on either side of the Lone Little Path, each one flat on the ground and motionless. They would be safe enough if Mother Bear and the three cubs remained in the Lone Little Path.

But those cubs were running back and forth across the Lone Little Path and poking about in the leaves on either side. If they did that where the baby Grouse was hiding, they would be almost sure to find one or more of them with their keen little noses. Even if they didn't find those babies, they might step on some of them and kill them. Peter became very much worried. How dreadful it would be to have anything like that happen!

He looked at Mrs. Grouse, and was just in time to see her rise swiftly into the air. Usually when Mrs. Grouse flies she makes a loud whirr with her wings as she rises. She didn't this time. She went into the air almost silently. Straight toward the Bear family she flew, and then as she drew near them swung off to one side and dropped down to the ground. There she began to flutter and flap about as if badly hurt. Of course, this made a loud rustling of the dry leaves on the ground.

Of course, Mother Bear's quick ears instantly caught the sound of those rustling leaves and she turned to look sharply in that direction. The three little Bears heard that rustling too, and of course they looked. They saw a large, plump bird apparently helpless and badly hurt. Instantly the three little Bears started for her. But Mother Bear didn't. Mother Bear sat up and there was a twinkle in her shrewd little eyes as she watched the three little Bears start to see which would get to that fluttering bird first.

Such excited little Bears as they were! My, my, my, such excited little Bears as they were! Mrs. Grouse flopped and fluttered along the ground and acted for all the world as if one wing was broken. First one and then another of the little Bears would jump for her, and each time she barely fluttered out of reach.

Mother Bear rocked from side to side as she watched, and it seemed to Peter Rabbit that she was grinning. Certainly she was very much interested, but she made no move to go help the little Bears catch Mrs. Grouse. Once Little Bear actually touched the tail feathers of Mrs. Grouse. "I've got her!" she squealed. But she hadn't got her. Somehow Mrs. Grouse managed to flop along without losing even one of those tall feathers. The three little Bears got in each other's way. They ran and jumped and did their best to pounce on poor Mrs. Grouse, and time and again it looked as if they must succeed. But always Mrs. Grouse fluttered away.

All the time Mrs. Grouse and the three little Bears were going away from the place where the twelve baby Grouse were hiding. Presently they were out of sight, though Peter could still hear the excited little Bears as they tried to catch Mrs. Grouse. After a while Peter heard the distant roar of stout wings, and a couple of minutes later he caught a glimpse of Mrs. Grouse as she alighted in a tree on the hill above him. She had simply been fooling those little Bears and leading them away from where her babies were.

Morality

What are the morals of the city? Of the small town? Is your idea of morality like your neighbor's? Can there be one standard of morality for us all? Here is a great question discussed from many view points by Gene Stratton-Porter, Coningsby Dawson and others.

Morality in the small town

The small town has its own conception of morality. And the most popular author in the world has written her best novel about it. Gene Stratton-Porter's "The White Flag" pitilessly reveals the moral outlook of the small town, its guarded secrets, its amazing hypocrisy. It strips the big town's accusers of their pretense. Start this novel in July Good Housekeeping.

Morality in the city

Society is searching for new thrills. Life in the big city every day becomes more artificial. Does this artificiality tend to destroy the home and make marriage less binding? Does it make marriage rarer? Coningsby Dawson has turned the search-light of his observation and brilliant story-telling ability on the question and the result is a novel of inescapable significance. Start "The Coast of Folly" in July Good Housekeeping. It is a flaming protest—and a warning to every girl who ventures on its treacherous shore.

The morality of marriage

What is it that sets women by the thousands falling in love with other women's husbands or lovers? What makes men seek out other men's wives? Here is another aspect of morality—turned inside out. Read this thought-provoking article "Crying for the Moon" in July Good Housekeeping.

What is the answer?

The world is completely upset. Where and how will it end? Three authors in a single issue of Good Housekeeping approach this great and absorbing question from separate angles, each showing a different side. See how their analyses coincide—or disagree—with yours.
