

Citizen Soldier Camps to Raise Type of Manhood

Training Intended to Develop Youth to Greater State of Physical, Mental and Moral Perfection.

In addition to preparing young men for service in the army in case of hostilities, in the three military training camps which will be held from August 1 to 30 in the Seventh Corps area, the War department has announced its intention to develop a better type of American manhood.

Although the War department's requirements are high for the applicants, it is intended to develop the young men to a greater state of physical, mental and moral perfection.

Considerable interest is being aroused in the various localities within the corps area by the young men who are applying to measure up to the government's qualifications. The following requirements must be met: Death Rate Lower. Weight 100 pounds; height, 4 feet 11 inches; chest expansion, at least two inches; good vision and hearing; teeth serviceable. A mental development sufficient to understand military discipline and orders must have been reached.

Merritt W. Ireland, surgeon general of the United States army, is greatly enthused over the educational features of the camps. He has announced that the training the young men receive will enable them to return to their homes with physical fitness and habits for good health which will be an incentive to others.

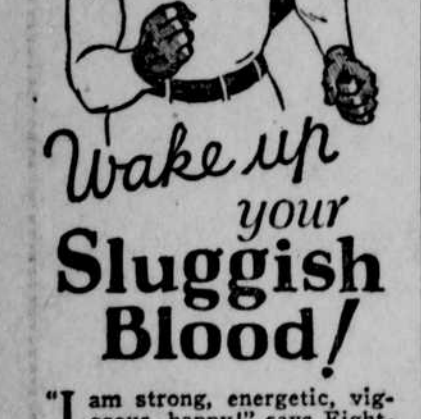

The death rate among the students who attend these camps is lower than that found in any other class of the United States; of the 23,343 men who attended last year's camps, there were only two deaths, both of which were caused by appendicitis which existed before the men entered the camps.

Four Courses Offered. Young men between the ages of 17 and 24 are eligible for this year's camps. Four courses will be offered, the Basic Red, Advanced Red, White and Blue. Those finishing schooling in Kansas, Arkansas and Missouri, Fort Leavenworth, Kan. The War department has made arrangements with the Military Training Camps association, railroad agents and postmasters to furnish information and application blanks relative to the camps. Maj. Gen. George B. Duncan, Seventh corps area, will also supply additional information.

Battleship N. Y. Wins Cup. Washington, June 30.—The cup presented to the navy by the city of Spokane, Wash., for annual award to the battleship making the highest average of hits with turret guns at short range battle practice has been awarded to the New York for the year 1922-1923.

The American Defense society cup for highest average attained by any vessel of the battleship class with all guns was awarded to the New Mexico.

Mother of 9 Graduated. Los Angeles, June 30.—Mrs. Rose Marie A. Purcell, 56, mother of nine children and grandmother of six, received her diploma at a local high school last night. Besides her son, Frank, also a graduate, and in the audience was her youngest daughter, Naomi, a member of the freshman class. Asked if she planned to enter college next fall, Mrs. Purcell said she thought not, but added, "they had better not let me get too close to a university."

Wake up your Sluggish Blood! "I am strong, energetic, vigorous, happy!" says Fighting Blood. "My nerves are steady. I am young! My tissues and flesh are free from the accumulation of waste products and impurities which cause pimples, blackheads, boils, eczema, rheumatism! I never have that tired, worn-out, run-down feeling! My health is all that is good. I am life itself!" Because S.S.S. does build blood-cells, it stops pimples, blackheads, boils, eczema, rheumatism! It builds firm flesh, fills out hollow cheeks, beautifies the complexion and builds you up when you are run-down.

Ford Is Dubbed "a Bag of Gold" Election to Presidency Would Be Bowing Down to Mammon, Says G. O. P. Chief.

New York, June 30.—Election to the presidency of Henry Ford "a mere bag of gold" would be bowing down to Mammon, Charles D. Hilles, republican national committeeman from New York, declared in a statement printed by the New York World today.

"Ford would make a pitiable spectacle as president because he has revealed a political knowledge and sense that a schoolboy would be ashamed of. And it is Mr. Ford who asserted that all history is mere 'bunk.' Henry Ford is said to be the richest man in the world. It is part of our Americanism to begrudge no man his wealth if he has made it honestly and by service. But if we place at the head of the nation, to speak for us before the world, a mere bag of gold, who knows nothing about anything except making automobiles, we shall bow down to Mammon indeed, and the democracy of Washington and Lincoln will degenerate into failure."

Chicago, June 30.—Delegates were arriving today for the special convention of the National Farmer-Labor party here beginning Tuesday to consider plans for a federation of farmer and labor groups for political activities.

An organization similar in many respects to the British labor party is the goal of the leaders in the conference, according to Jay G. Brown of Chicago, secretary of the farmer-labor party.

Leaders in the farmer-labor party declared the possibility of launching a third party with Henry Ford as the standard bearer in the presidential race "on an economic platform" will be considered.

William Z. Foster is expected to be a delegate. The socialist party will not be represented. The progressive parties of Idaho and Nebraska and the progressive farmers of western Washington will send delegations.

Anti-Saloon League Plans Active Part in Campaign. Westerville, O., June 30.—The Anti-Saloon League of America, in harmony with its policy of 20 years, will not request conventions of either political party to adopt a dry platform plank or one sustaining the 18th amendment, the executive committee of the organization decided at a conference here today.

The league will, however, leaders said, continue its policy of endeavoring to secure the nomination and election of candidates favorable to prohibition and effective enforcement of liquor laws. Leaders of the organization, while warning the people that one of the biggest fights of all years is just ahead, expressed confidence that the political conventions of 1924 will nominate dry candidates.

De Valera Urges People to Elect Republicans. Dublin, June 30.—Eamon de Valera, in a manifesto to his followers and to the people of Ireland regarding the elections, urges the putting forward of one republican candidate at each constituency.

De Valera asserts that these candidates, if elected, would take no oath of allegiance to England and would constitute the Free State, which he accurately described as more servile than free. When the people are called on to contribute 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 pounds to the imperial fund, they will awaken.

France Moves to Ratify Parts of Navy Agreement. Paris, June 30.—In conformity with Article 8 of the French constitution, concerning powers of the legislative executive in the ratification of treaties, the government yesterday deposited with the chamber of deputies a bill asking for ratification of that part of the Washington naval agreements which deals with the protection of neutrals on the high seas and the use of asphyxiating gas in war time.

The measure calls for only one reservation, namely, that the treaty "should not be interpreted as modifying rules previously established between signatory powers concerning surface ships, or as imposing upon submarines navigating in conformity with such rules, a regime other than that applied to surface ships."

Camp McClellan Officer Shot and Killed by Wife. Aniston, Ala., June 30.—Lieut. James C. Ritchner was shot and killed almost instantly at 7:30 last night by his wife, who is held in the Calhoun county jail, according to officers who investigated the case.

The shooting occurred in the quarters of the couple at Camp McClellan.

Charter Granted to New Gothenburg Kiwanis Club

Special Dispatch to The Omaha Bee. Gothenburg, Neb., June 30.—Kiwanis club members from North Platte, Lexington, Kearney, Grand Island and Hastings attended the charter meeting of the Gothenburg club, held at the Houston hotel the night of June 26. Charter was delivered to the new club by J. J. Guenther of Holdrege, Neb., governor of Nebraska and Iowa Kiwanis clubs.

Officers of the new club include W. M. Stebbins, president; E. J. Loutzenheiser, vice president; W. P. Byron, district trustee; A. G. Wambach, treasurer; and D. E. Harper, secretary. Board of directors includes W. J. Burker, C. E. Fraser, B. A. Norrisworth, H. A. Burke, F. L. Hanson, A. J. Novak and E. C. Stevenson.

Speakers included John N. Dryden, State Regulation of Utilities Urged.

Washington, June 30.—The United States today faced a serious crisis with foreign powers over American prohibition laws. The State department clearly was perturbed over the attitude of Great Britain. The plain warning conveyed by Lord Curzon that, while American seizures of beverage liquors on foreign ships is admittedly legal, yet cannot be condoned as in strict conformity with international practice or comity, was the cue for a stir in the other diplomatic corps.

While the State and Treasury departments today had only the brief and seemingly unimportant "protests" of foreign ship captains whose vessels had been boarded and liquors seized by government customs officers, foreign embassies and legations were disturbed over the "real purpose" of the American government.

Diplomats in conversations with State department officials claim that their governments were in no sense acquiescing in any plan by foreign ship lines to persist in bringing beverage liquors into American territorial waters.

London, June 30.—"There is no chance for relaxation of the dry ship regulation until the American congress modifies the law unless Washington is able to make treaties with the foreign powers on the subject," Secretary of the American Treasury Andrew Mellon declared today.

The prohibition law prohibits the transportation of liquor within the territorial waters of the United States. The government has no alternative but to enforce it. The government might make a treaty which would enable United States officials to search and seize outside of the three-mile limit, but permitting foreign liners to bring liquor under seal. Such a treaty would have to be made through the treaty-making power of the president and confirmed by the American senate. Otherwise there is no chance for relaxation until congress acts."

U. S. "Evacuates" Russia. Moscow, June 30.—American "evacuation" of Russia began yesterday with the departure of the first large group of American relief administration workers for America. Eleven of them, one with a Russian bride, left this afternoon on a special car which will travel via Warsaw; five others left by way of Riga.

Altogether about 20 of the American relief workers married while in Russia. Those who have left included: Frank Burland, Los Angeles, and Hugh Reynolds, Pasadena.

Landlord Arrested on Eavesdropping Charge. Boston, June 30.—Willis Braverman of Charleston, owner of a house in Chelsea, was arrested on a charge of eavesdropping on complaint of the tenant, Mrs. Mary C. Breen. Braverman denies the charge, declaring he had come to the house to collect rent due him. The case is the first of its kind on a special car which provides a maximum penalty of two years in jail or a fine of $500.

Rough-Hewn Dorothy Canfield

SYNOPSIS. Neale Crittenden, 15 years old, is a typical red-headed American boy living with his parents in Union Hill, a small village on the south of Berkeley, Cal. He completed three years in preparatory school. Vacation work he had done in the summer of 1922 to visit relatives, he and his father and mother went to the French woman, Marie's father is foreign agent for American goods in the French west coast. Marie is French peasant servant, Marie is deeply interested in the study of French and Latin. She has a great love for the French language and spends much time in her recreation. One day he rides to Sutter, a large scenic ranch and his father runs across his old boyhood friend, Don Robertson, who is a student at the college. Friends, Polly and Natalie Underhill, although Neale has never played tennis, he is anxious to learn to play the game.

The Peterson body did not stay to flaunt his triumph. Pleading an impending thunder-storm as an excuse (the sky was as a matter of fact very black and lowering), he scurried off on his heels back to Montclair with the spoils of victory bound to his handle-bars. With his departure, the atmosphere of gloom among Don's friends again became as thick as the indoors. The girls set about getting supper with a great clatter of wafting dishes, and much giggling, with such clap of thunder. By the time the cheese was melted, Don reappeared in blue serge and negligible silk shirt. Coming down the steps he had been standing apart with his back against the new post.

"Oh, drop your grouch, Critt. Old man," he said. "Forget it! Of course Nordhoff's a pretty rotten umpire. Suppose he thought he gave the kid a chance, but he needn't have stung me on all the close ones." On this, he passed lightly to the supper table, where later, on being loudly called, Neale followed. He stood with his hands on his hips, though he had forgotten where he was. It was his first supper out with young people, the first time he had seen anything prepared over a chattering-dish; the first time he had encountered the traditional young people's menu of that date—veal-walnut, steak, chicken, and potatoes. He was alone at the table. He had been in the room for some time, looking at the menu. He had been in the room for some time, looking at the menu. He had been in the room for some time, looking at the menu.

Presently Neale turned out his Welsh-bach burner and rolled into bed. He encountered a strange, new sensation, an immense relief to lay himself down, and to have darkness about him. For the first time in his life he was consciously very tired. For the first time he knew the adult sensation of having lived to the point of weariness, for the first time he felt the passive sweetness of the resigned welcome of repose which is perhaps a premonition of our ultimate weariness and our ultimate welcome to death.

For a moment Neale lay there, drowned in astonishment at this new, unexpected pleasure. Then, with a warning, the thick cloud of a boy's sleep dropped over him like black velvet. The next morning, his father, passing the way to his cold bath, looked in and saw the boy, sunk fatigues deep in sleep, the bright new sunlight of the early morning shining full on his face. How can children sleep so soundly? His father stepped into the room, walking silently on bare feet, and drew down the shades. The shading of the room did not wake the sleeper. He still lay profoundly at rest and yet profoundly alive, one long, big-boned arm thrown over his head on the pillow, as though he had slept when he was a child.

For an instant the face of Neale's father was unlocked as he stood looking down on his son. Then, with a great heave, he stepped back into the hallway, silent as his bare feet, and went on to shave, and to take his cold bath.

It was after 10 when Neale awakened and the day had sunk from its first fresh hopefulness into the resigned apathy of a hot midmorning. Neale came slowly to himself and rolled over, a very bad taste in his mouth. He had not noticed it at the time, but he now thought, scraping his coated tongue against his teeth, that melted cheese and cake and nuttude and sing-song were a damned bad combination to be swallowing of an evening. And as for the rest... oh, go! Never again!

The telephone rang; he heard Katie answer and clump up the stairs to see if he were awake. "Somebody to talk to you, Neale," she said, seeing him sitting up. Neale's father might not be his longer a child, Neale's mother might keep her hands from fussing over him, but for Katie he would always be the little boy she had helped to bring up. She laid her hand on his head now, and Neale did not mind.

"You answer," he said stolidly. "It's him that's always telephoning," she explained. "He's after wantin' you to go and play tennis."

"You tell him I can't go," Neale repeated. Neale retreated astonished. Neale heard the sound of her voice at the telephone two flights below. Then she shouted up, "Neale!" He went to the stairs and answered crossly, "What?" "He wants to know will you be goin' this afternoon?" "No!" shouted Neale, leaning over the banisters. In a moment she cried again. "He wants to know will you be goin' tomorrow morning?" "No!" shouted Neale again, and going into the bathroom locked the door behind him.

When rather damp as to hair, he came out, silence and the smell of frying bacon told him that Katie had left the telephone to get his breakfast ready. Geo. Whit? He didn't want any breakfast, not with a taste like that in his mouth.

To act the part of a lone wolf of 15, one must read poetry. He had never read much poetry except some of Milton's Paradise Lost, for a specially hoisted English literature course at Hadley. But there were plenty of poetry books in the library at home. After some false starts, Neale began to know his way among them, concentrating on the slim volumes with postboard covers and paper backs.

"Dearth the bludgeonings of chance..." Yes, Neale too would hold up an unloved, bloody head, without fear, without wish, inenstate save of a dull crushed ache in my heart. "Just to reach the dreamy, And the sleep."

Sitting alone in the darkened library how Neale soaked himself in this sort of thing, hunting up one page and down another till he found the voice that spoke to him.
