10,000,000 in U. S. Are Illiterate

So Declares Chairman of U. S. Illiteracy Commission at N. E. A. Meet.

Oakland, Cal., July 2.—A careful census in which every individual would be put to the test of reading simple paragraphs and writing simple sentences would show there are approximately 10,000,000 illiterates in the United States and nearly as many near illiterates, delegates to the National Education association's convention were told today by Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, chairman of the United States illiteracy commission.

"In the most illiterate sections," she asserted, "conditions approach the barbaric. Marriage has no sanctity and commerce is carried on through barter and trade. In these densely illiterate communities the currency of the country is unknown as a medium of exchange, neither silver, gold nor paper money being in use. It is needless to say that in a section where even the currency of the country does not circulate none of its progressive or helpful ideas will flow or will be adopted."

Special Dispatch to The Omaha Bee. Plattsmouth, Neb., July 2.—Working frantically night and day to protect the rip rap work along the Iowa bank of the Missouri river opposite this city from further inroads of the bank-full stream, Burlington section men and extra gangs are centering their efforts at this point, following the washing out of some 40 feet of the rip rap Thursday night. Carlond, an earload of crushed stone is being dumped into the swirling current. In the past 10 years the Burlington has spent thousands of dollars in an effort to check the tendency of the river to carve a new channel for itself through the fertile fields of Mills county, Iowa, leaving its $1,000,000 bridge here stranded high and dry over an empty bed, and the indications point to its having this fight on its hands yearly when the June rise comes.

Burgess Bedtime Stories

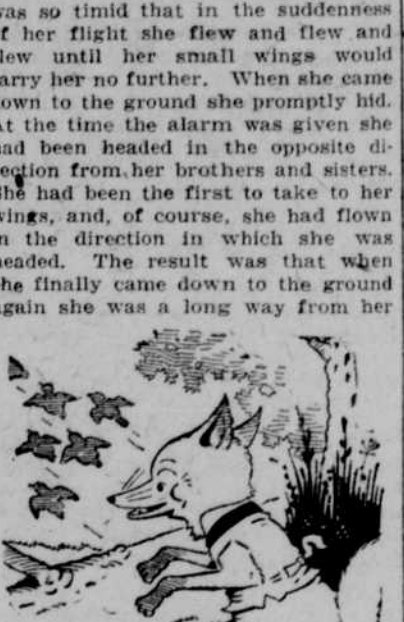

By THORNTON W. BURGESS. Anxiety goes hand in hand with mother love throughout the land. —Mrs. Grouse. The Fears of Mrs. Grouse Are Realized. There is just as much difference between the children of the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows as there is between little human children. Some are smarter than others. Some are more timid than others. Some are more curious than others. Some are more needless than others. Some are more disobedient than others.

In such a big family as Mrs. Grouse's there was bound to be a great difference. You remember that there were 12 young Grouse. If Mrs. Grouse could have been sure that all would do exactly the same thing in exactly the same way it would have made it much easier for her. She would have been far less anxious. But she could never be sure just what each one would do in time of danger. She was always fearful that when they took to their wings some might fly too far and get lost. So in spite of the fact that those young Grouse were growing rapidly, and every day were better able to take care of themselves, Mrs. Grouse worried. It happened one day that they were so busy getting their breakfast that Reddy Fox managed to steal almost within jumping distance of them before Mrs. Grouse discovered him. Just in time she saw him. "Fox! Fox!" she cried. Those young Grouse knew by the sound of her voice that they were in great danger. Without a second of delay they took to their wings. Away they went up over the tree tops, scattering in all directions.

Now one of those young Grouse was more timid than the others. She was so timid that in the suddenness of her flight she flew and flew and flew until her small wings would carry her no further. When she came down to the ground she promptly hid. At the time the alarm was given she had been headed in the opposite direction from her brothers and sisters. She had been the first to take to her wings, and, of course, she had flown in the direction in which she was headed. The result was that when she finally came down to the ground again she was a long way from her mother and brothers and sisters. She didn't know it then, nor did they. But when the danger was past and Mrs. Grouse called her scattered children to her she discovered that her fear had been realized. Of course, the first thing she did was to count them. There were 11 instead of 12. She counted them again. She counted them a third time. Each time she counted 11. One was missing. There was no doubt about it, one was missing. Could Reddy Fox have caught that one? She thought she had been the last one to leave the ground and she was quite sure that she had seen him and given the alarm in time. But one of those children was missing. What could have happened?

Mrs. Grouse began to call. She called (and called, and then listened. There was no reply. She called again. She kept calling and listening. It was all in vain. There was no sound or sign of the missing little Grouse. (Copyright 1923)
