"Crop conditions are the best I have ever seen in the places we visited since I have been making the rounds of those localities in the past 30 years," said Colonel Gallup.

Representatives of the company recently returned from Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and southern states with information that there is an excellent outlet in those states for horses and mules.

Southern Dry Workers Resent Political "Dope"

In a statement signed by 11 representatives of the Anti-Saloon league from southern states, a resolution was adopted last week by the dry workers pledging themselves to support for president any candidate in sympathy with honest enforcement of prohibition laws.

Southern superintendents of the Anti-Saloon league issued a statement concerning the wet and dry issue within the democratic party, at a conference of the superintendents of the league held at Westerville, O., last week.

The statement was instigated by press stories of plans formulated by the wet democrats of the north and east to force the national democratic convention next year to nominate for president a man opposed to the "volstead act," claiming that the "solid south" would vote for any candidate who held that view on the prohibition question.

Superintendents from Texas, Georgia, Mississippi, Virginia, Alabama, South Carolina, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Kentucky and Arkansas signed the document.

Mennonite Girl Killed for 'Sin' of Showing Beauty

Police Believe Religious Fanatic Murdered Pretty Governor's Daughter in New York Home.

By International News Service. Scarsdale, N. Y., July 7.—Dorothy Kaufmann, 21, pretty Mennonite girl, died for her "sins"—the "sin" of exposing the beauty of her arms and the white of her perfectly moulded throat.

Authorities investigating the brutal murder of the governess, slain at the country home of Magruder Craighead, New York broker, were tonight convinced such was the "motive" behind the crime.

Reconstructing the killing, detectives fitted into their theory a sheet of letters—the stories of love, hidden beneath the rigid religious terms of men of the Mennonite faith. These were found in Miss Kaufmann's effects.

They were not the burning love notes such as other girls might receive. Rather they were serious of right. Hope to Pierce Curtain.

Through them detectives hope to pierce the curtain of mystery which, since the finding of the girl's body, has hidden every clue which might lead to solving the crime.

The straight home is on a wooded plateau, well off the main road. Behind the house is a densely wooded thicket.

Here police believe the murderer laid in wait. Sheriff George Werner, in charge of the investigation, believes the slayer was a religious fanatic.

A year ago the girl came to New York. She had been reared in the Maryland hills; sheltered in the tiny Mennonite colony of Westover.

Even in the drab mother Hubbard of her sect—the colonies, not her sect she was compelled to wear, she was beautiful.

Wanted to Quit Drab Life. "But I wanted to get away from it so—from the families of 10 and a dozen children; of the narrow little views of those about me," the girl told the few friends she made here.

In the little poke bonnet and the ill-fitting mother Hubbard, Miss Kaufmann accompanied her employer's family to fashionable Long Branch, and other watering places. Occasionally she saw the girls of Broadway.

There she bought a new dress. It was a vivid chrome, sleeveless. The throat was cut very low. Last Act of Renunciation.

It was the last act of renunciation of the faith of the Maryland hills—more than sin, it was sacrifice. These, Sheriff Werner believes, were the thoughts of the man who, sometime Tuesday, stole from his hiding place in the woods, entered the Craighead home, armed with a seven-inch butcher knife, plunged the blade into the girl's back and thrust seven times.

"The motive was not the one we first suspected when we believed a friend had attacked Miss Kaufmann," Werner said tonight. An autopsy showed Miss Kaufmann had not been assaulted.
