Invitations for Large Affairs for Newlyweds Recalled Tuesday

This week is to be one of canceled affairs for newlyweds. Many would-be hostesses have changed their minds because of the heat and have reduced parties to four courses, but illness has robbed social Omaha of one of the largest affairs of the summer season.

Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Johnson recalled the 150 invitations issued for the reception they were to have given Saturday evening, July 14, because of the continued illness of Mr. Johnson, who has been confined to the hospital for some time. Their daughter, Mrs. R. Russell Best, and her husband, Dr. Best, are hurrying home from their honeymoon in Maine to be honor guests at the affair and will arrive Saturday.

Yesterday Miss Peggy Reed canceled her luncheon party. A recurrence of the appendicitis attack Mrs. Denman Kountze suffered in London on her honeymoon and the operation which she underwent yesterday at the Clark hospital robbed Miss Reed of her honor guest.

Forty-Five Attend School of Citizenship.

Forty-five men and women attended the opening of the University of Omaha summer school of citizenship at the Borgess-Nash tea room Monday afternoon. Prof. Frederick Krueger of the University of Omaha, gave the first of a series of 10 talks on "Principles and Problems of American Government." The lectures will be given daily at 2 p. m. in the tea room.

From July 20 to 25, Prof. Arnold B. Hall of the University of Wisconsin will give 10 lectures on "Making of Citizens." The talks will be followed by general discussions. The Nebraska Civil Service Reform, Omaha League of Women Voters and Second District Nebraska Federation of Women's Clubs are sponsoring the lectures.

What Mother Graham Did to Make "the Place" Secure.

Katherine's description of Mother Graham as "imagining the curtain just gone down on the first act," was most apropos, I mentally commented, as my mother-in-law came hurrying back into the living room, with Mrs. Ticer smiling sedately in her wake.

She was all a-twitter with excitement, and I saw that, as usual when anything exciting happens, her ill-temper had been smothered by her curiosity.

"Bless my soul, girls!" she said importantly, as she bustled in. "Have you heard about this escaped bootlegger, probably a murderer, whom Mr. Ticer and Jerry are helping the state troopers to hunt?"

I did not need Katherine's surreptitious nudge to take my car. It would never do to rob Mother Graham of the dramatic thrill which would invest her recital of the facts she had just learned from Mrs. Ticer.

"That's a good idea!" I exclaimed in pretended astonishment. "Jerry said something about chasing a man, but I didn't—"

"That's about as much concentration as you ever put upon a subject, Margaret," my mother-in-law interrupted with kindly hauteur. "Suppose you listen carefully, now. Mrs. Ticer says—"

With commendable gravity, Katherine and I listened to Mother Graham's exaggerated version of the tracking expedition Sam Ticer and Jerry had joined and of which we had heard in detail from Sam Ticer himself, only a few minutes before.

By no gesture or word did Katherine betray our previous knowledge, although the "comprehending twinkle" in Mrs. Ticer's eyes before she turned to the window made it hard for us to keep our faces straight.

"I must warn Jim to keep a lookout." This when she had repeated every detail of the story at least twice, "Why, the man might take a notion to try to hide in our barn!"

That subconsciously she hoped he would do that very thing, was plain to all of us. With reluctance I spoke for the first time since my mother-in-law's monologue began.

"Don't you think we'd better tell Jim to keep the news from Katie as long as he can?" I asked deferentially, for I had visions of what our household would be like with Katie's probable hysteria added to Mother Graham's excitement.

"Really, Margaret, that's a very good idea," my mother-in-law's comment was the perfection of patronage, as she left the room, and Katherine finished the sentence with a grin.

"For a moron," she murmured in so low a voice I was sure Mrs. Ticer did not hear her. With a hasty impudent grimace at her, I turned to our neighbor, who with instinctive self-effacing courtesy, had pretended to be absorbed with the view of the distant ocean from the living room windows, while my mother-in-law was talking to me.

"Did you tell Mother Graham about getting the kid across the Toad to help?" I asked.

Mrs. Ticer turned from the window with an amused little smile playing around her mouth.

"I didn't get a chance," she said. "I happened to mention the bootlegger first, and just as soon as she had found out all I knew, she flew down here."

"Suppose you sit down," I suggested. "You'll have quite a wait for Mother Graham. I imagine."

"She's probably searching the barn herself by this time," Katherine commented whimsically, but I, knowing my doughty mother-in-law, was sure that my friend's conjecture had far more of truth than she suspected.

Mother Graham is pleased. "I thought I might start on the room," Mrs. Ticer said, "but she didn't tell me which one, she got so excited about the news. Could you tell me where I'm to start?"

I shook my head decidedly. "No, indeed, I wouldn't think of interfering with her plans. If I were at home all the time it would be different. But she is in charge here, while I am gone—I am here now only for two or three days—and I mustn't say a word."

"Being a wise lady with a due regard for the position of your head, on your shoulders!" Katherine chuckled, and I realized that the last of her rancor against my mother-in-law was being dissipated in these caustic little comments.

"Exactly," I returned, and then we sat in the desultory chatter with which people fill up time, until my mother-in-law came in, palpably much pleased with herself.

"Well, he isn't around these premises," she announced triumphantly. "I took Jim with me, and we searched every cranny of the barn and every other building on the place. Jim's harrangue all the doors everywhere now—"

—he can carry the keys with him, and unlock them when he takes the animals in and out—and then he's going over all the fastenings of the house."

Christian Church Opens Convention

Special Dispatch to The Omaha Bee. Grand Island, Neb., July 10.—The annual convention of the Christian Church of Nebraska is in session here with about 100 of the pastors and leading church workers of the delegation present. The First Christian church of this city is entertaining.

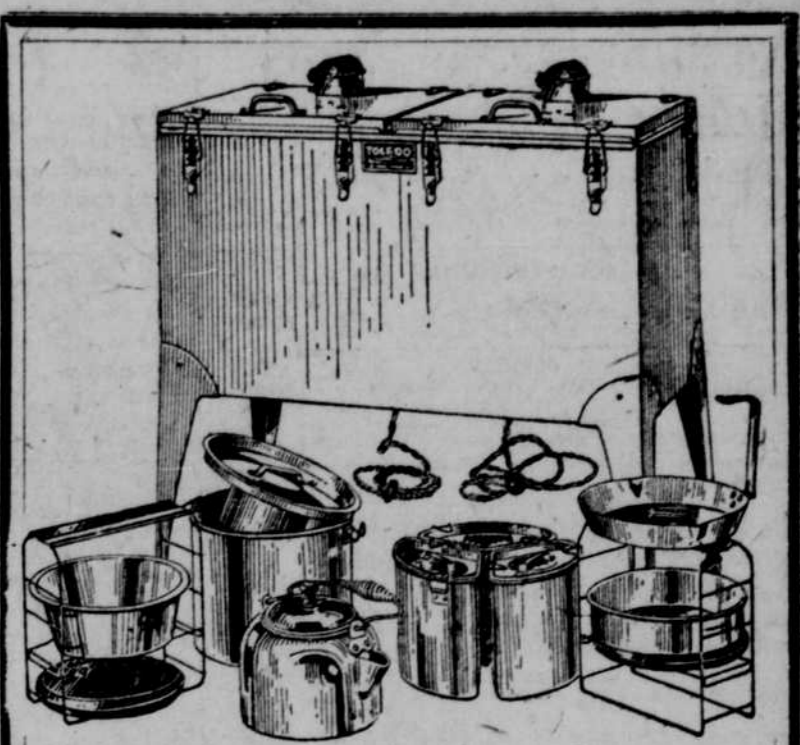

The session was called to order by J. C. McLucas of Fairbury, chairman of the assembly. Other leaders present at the opening session were Rev. M. Lee Conroy of Berkeley, Cal., recording secretary; Rev. John G. Albers of Bethany, corresponding secretary; Dr. Charles Elliott Cobby of Bethany, president; C. O. Baker of Alliance, Rev. C. C. Dohks of Aurora, Rev. W. A. Baldwin of Broken Bow, and Rev. C. C. Buckner of Fairbury.

Devotional and social services and committee preparations of reports in the various departments of the work marked the first day's activities.

Luncheon Hostess. Miss Ellice Holovitchner entertained at luncheon Monday at Carter Lake club in honor of Miss Jean Hall, who leaves Sunday for Berkeley, Cal., where she will enter the University of California next year, and for Miss Margaret Robinson left last night for Portland, Ore. Covers were laid for 12.

Evening Bridge. Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Eldredge of Fairacres entertained at bridge Monday evening at their home complimentary to Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Gilbert, who left last evening for Chicago, where they will visit their son, William C. Gilbert and Mrs. Gilbert. They will be gone two months.

For Miss Loucks. Miss Mildred Rhoades will entertain at a bridge party on Friday afternoon at her home in honor of Miss Ethel Loucks, the guest of her sister, Mrs. Elton Loucks. Mrs. Elton Loucks will give a bridge party Saturday at her home for her sister.
