Want to Keep Your Hair Perpetually Curly?

Perpetually wavy or curly hair is now within the grasp of every woman. One need only get a few ounces of plain liquid salmerine from the druggist and apply a little of it occasionally with a brush before going to bed. This dries the most beautiful natural looking waves and creates imaginable air in evidence. Wind and heat do not affect the curls as when a heated iron has been used. Liquid salmerine is so pure and harmless, there is no danger of spotting the scalp or streaking the hair, and it leaves no sticky or greasy traces. It keeps the hair soft, silky and lustrous.

Paris is regarding navy blue with great respect these days. There was a time when brown had everything its own way. This was after the days of black. Of late, however, there has been a return to navy blue both for tailcoats and for one-piece house frocks.

The majority of women found that dark blue was too becoming to be discarded lightly. They demanded it back, with the result that the leading designers of Paris included many smart models in navy blue in their recent collections.

The costume sketched today is of Poiret twill, that indispensable material for tailcoats.

Both the coat and skirt are adorably youthful in appearance, for they follow the slim, straight lines of the newest mode.

The striking and unusual feature of this frock is the interesting wool embroidery in canary yellow and purple which edges the coat and gives character to the one-piece frock.

This embroidery adds all kinds of distinction and succeeds in making this costume unusually striking and out of the ordinary.

Gay wool embroidery in canary yellow and purple is the distinguishing feature of this smart tailcoat of navy blue twill.

Sauce for Spring Lamb.

To obtain the best flavor from mint sauce, pour a little boiling water over the mint and sugar before adding the vinegar. The full essence of the mint will be drawn out in this manner.

Beatrice Fairfax PROBLEMS THAT PERPLEX.

Disillusioned: You are no different from hundreds of others, my dear. "I thought I loved him." Three other women have said this to me in as many days. Each was trying to explain the collapse of her marriage, her utter failure to find happiness in the home she had built with such high hopes.

But each—when we had gone into the matter carefully and analytically—revealed something which should have warned her in the beginning that she had not found her "true love."

"Even when we were engaged, Jim couldn't hold a job," acknowledged one. "Down in the bottom of my heart I hated his inefficiency—but I thought I could change it. I loved him so that I wouldn't believe he was shiftless. I wouldn't even think it."

"I knew Don drank," confessed the second. "But I had the idea that once he was happily established in his own home and was away from the threat he ran around with, it would be easy to cure him. I loved him so that I couldn't dream I'd find drink a rival too strong to meet."

The third woman said with an air of complete mystification: "Of course, my folks didn't like Matt. And he never could bear to sit and talk with mother and he thought father was the most intolerant person in the world. But I didn't think it mattered. I loved him so that I didn't worry over how he got on with my family. He wasn't marrying them!"

Now, why should any thinking woman march deliberately into a marriage with a weakling, a drunkard or a selfish creature who won't try to make friends with her people? A "thinking" woman wouldn't. But too many women are so dazzled by the emotion they call love that they don't permit on honest mental reaction to threaten the illusion at which they long to clutch.

Women—and men as well—permit themselves to be duped by their longing for a mate. But they don't wait to find that mate. They haul down the flag of intelligence and wisdom and judgment and joyously run up the banner of emotion and desire. And then when the ship founders on the rocks they actually glimpsed on the course they were sailing—they wonder why.

No one would go in partnership with some one whose basic fault was so great that all the basic virtues were negated and wiped out by it. Don't marry any one you wouldn't take into partnership if you were of the same sex. Don't marry any one you don't respect enough to like as well as love. And don't forget that when
