John A. Stevenson Tells Timothy Kinney, millionaire flock-master, and widely known through-Objections of "Hard-Boiled" Prospects.

Pointers on meeting objections to life insurance were given by John A. Stevenson, second vice president be served as soon as the accused of the Equitable Life Assurance are located. society of New York, to 103 members of the Omaha Association of Nathall Jones, 17, Montpelier, Idaho day noon in the ballroom of Hotel

Dr. Stevenson is nationally known among life insurance men as an authority on salesmanship. Thomas W. Blackman, counsel for the Prairie Life Insurance company, introduced the speaker. He is author of three text books on salesmanship, was organizer and first head of the school of salesmanship at the Carnegie Institute of Technology, and was called to his present position with the Equitable society three years ago.

"Objections aid in sales, because they give the salesman an opening. the man who listens to everything objections met by life insurance men are not serious but are mere barks of the customer intended to test the salesman's mettle," Mr. Stevenson

Mr. Stevenson outlined three principal methods of meeting objections: First, the admission method, by agreeing with the objection but bringing out some new phase of the situation more powerful than the objection: seizing the objection and showing that it is really an argument for law. buying the insurance; third, the "passing-up" method, in which the
