Though Ready to Camp, Visitors Gladly Accept Indoor Sleeping Quarters

The best kind of a camping trip, most will agree, is the sort that Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. Baker are making. They started from their home in Richmond, Kan., Thursday morning in their car. The car is filled with their two tiny daughters, Emily and Nancy; their maid, the maid's son and their beautifully dispositioned dog, a folding bath tub and two tents, but despite all the stern measures implied by the last mentioned, they spent Thursday night safely housed in the large, airy bedrooms of Mrs. Charles T. Neale's home. Mrs. Baker, daughter of Mrs. Neale, has been a frequent visitor here and will be remembered by many friends.

Their ultimate destination is the Yellowstone, and their plans "are tenting tonight" and every night, but suspiciously located friends through the west preclude a necessity for it. They report that camping is so usual a thing that they despair of finding a place for their tents. By 5 in the evening most motorists have taken every available camping spot, and they fear that even out in "God's country" outdoor sleeping quarters will be at a premium.

Honoring Miss Fairfield.

Miss Peggy Reed entertained at bridge followed by dancing on the Athletic club roof Thursday when her honor guest was Miss Betty Fairfield. The Misses Lina Reed, Esther Meyer, Willow O'Brien, and Messrs Jack Peacock, George Metcalfe, Bob and Harry Burkley and J. J. Sheeran were among the guests.

Miss Cornelia Baum gave a bridge luncheon at the Country club for Miss Fairfield, and this evening the Lester Klopps will give a dinner at the Country club. Miss Fairfield leaves Monday to spend two weeks in Sioux City.

Visitor Honored.

Mrs. Peter Barber, jr., entertained at luncheon Friday at her home in compliment to Miss Lois Ickes of Toledo, O., who is visiting Miss Frances Hilliker.

Miss Hilliker entertained at luncheon on Monday in honor of her guest and at a picnic supper and swimming party Wednesday evening at Camp Brewster.

Bridge Dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Rudolph entertained at bridge and dinner Friday for Mrs. Roberta Eddy Kitchin, who has just returned from France, and for Miss Marie Niemann, whose marriage to Orin Houch will take place August 15. There will be five tables of bridge.

Kincaid-Drexel.

Miss Adelaide I. Drexel, daughter of Mrs. Chrislie Drexel of Florence, and Wade H. Kincaid of Benson were married at the Florence Presbyterian manse Thursday at 11 o'clock. The Rev. Everett W. Graham officiating. Only the attendants, Miss Bernice Park and Luther Drexel, the bride's brother, were present. After a wedding luncheon Mr. and Mrs. Kincaid left for a three months' wedding tour through Nebraska and Colorado. After their return they expect to make their home in this city.

Mrs. Charles Frankish, and Miss Ellen Frankish will go to Kalamazoo, Mich., the first of August.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Dean of Holdrege, Neb., stopped here at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Voss en route home from Chicago.

Mrs. A. J. Jaeger and daughter, Alberta, of Waterloo, Ia., who have been visiting Miss Alice Mahoney, leave today for their home.

Mrs. J. W. Burt returned Friday from St. Paul, where she went to accompany her mother, Mrs. H. A. Scandrett, on her return trip to Omaha.

Announcement is made of the birth of a son, Billy, at the Wise Memorial hospital, July 14, to Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Rogers. Mrs. Rogers was formerly Miss Helen McQuiston.

Mrs. Robert Huston and her daughter, Miss Eleanor, of Columbus, O., are the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Huston, jr., who are spending the summer with the Thomas Moores. Mr. Huston was called unexpectedly to Washington, D. C., Wednesday. Mr. Moore is in Onawa, Ia., with his mother, who though more than 90 years old is still hale and hearty.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

What Happened in the House Across the Road.

Katherine and I stared at each other for a tense second or two, as the possible meaning of Junior's pratfall came to our ears. Then, with the same thought, we rushed to the window. True enough, there was a saddled horse tied in the doorway, but no trace of any man that we could see. Neither was the dog in evidence.

"Where did the man break the window, Junior?" I asked, skeptically, because neither Katherine nor I had heard the sound of breaking. "Over here." He pointed firmly toward the side of the house across the road, then he raised his voice excitedly. "Oh, ma-ma, see man behind tree—peeking out."

Katherine's eyes and mine followed his pointing little finger. "My word!" whispered Katherine. "There is a man behind that tree! What does it mean?"

I had no answer ready, and would have had no opportunity to utter it if I had, for down the stairs came running feet, not light, nor yet heavy, but with a peculiar clumping sound, and into the living room, then through it to the kitchen beyond, dashed the girl, Mamie, her face white and set with terror.

By the time we had caught our breath, she was out of the kitchen door, and half way across the yard. But when she reached her own doorway, the man hidden behind the tree stepped out, seized her by the wrist and swung her around toward him. Shriek after shriek came from her lips, and I saw the gleam of an uplifted revolver.

"What on earth?" Katherine exclaimed. "Has that officer gone crazy?"

"Halt!"

We could distinguish his uniform plainly, also his extreme youth. "Only with too much youthful enthusiasm," I returned, making for the door. "But somebody must give him a word of caution, or he's likely to get excited and let that gun go off. There are a lot of little children in there, you know. Will you take Junior up to his grandmother, and then come on over? I'm going now."

"Richard Second's grandmother is right here." My mother-in-law sailed into the room as she spoke, ready, in her capable, arrogant way, for any emergency. "You and Mrs. Bickett go right over. I'll attend to things here. That young squirt of an officer needs his comb cut, and if he won't listen to you, call me over, I'll attend to him."

She looked perfectly capable of disciplining the entire United States army, to say nothing of the state constabulary. I said as much to Katherine as we hurried across the doorway.

"She wouldn't hesitate at drilling General Pershing, himself," Katherine acquiesced, and then we were electrified by a sharp, "Halt!" from the lips of the young officer who still kept a tight hold upon Mamie's wrist.

The girl, thoroughly cowed, was sobbing now pitifully, and I knew, which, I guessed, from the face of the boy—he was nothing more—were disturbing him greatly.

"What do you want?" he asked with an attempt at dignity, which was only a bluster. "I can't let you have any communication with this girl. This house is under guard."

It was no time for quibbling. I drew from his hiding place around my neck, the little insignia of my government service under Lillian, and held it out to him silently. His eyes opened wide as he recognized it, and he began to stammer apologies.

"I didn't know," he said. "Is there anything you—"

"Please understand one thing," I said hastily. "I am not here officially at all. Indeed, I never would have shown you this little badge, save that I must have a chance to help this girl and the little children in the house. I have only one request, one suggestion. Please do not move that revolver around so much. If it accidentally went off and killed some woman or child, you'd never forgive yourself."

"It can't go off accidentally," the boy replied with pride. "See?" and he showed the gun to us. "But my orders are to shoot if anybody tries to run away, and I'd have to do it, whether it was a woman or not."

He gave the girl, whose wrist he held a look meant to be loftily determined, but looking closely I saw that the boy was actually shaking. I guessed it was his very first assignment, and that he was drunk with excitement and an exaggerated sense of power and responsibility.

It is from his type before seasoning, that come so many casualties to innocent bystanders, and I knew that I must keep close to him until some older companion of his arrived to take charge of things.

"That's what I told the children in there,"—he jerked his head toward the house—"when we sent their mother and father down to the house go, and they haven't stirred from that bench since."
