Intermediate Credit banks and loans are made on a certain percentage of the market value as represented by the bonded warehouse receipts.

It was agreed by all that the intended purpose of the Federal Intermediate Credit banks as outlined by congress is to furnish credit for not less than a six months' term, thereby not conflicting with the Federal Reserve system and deposit banks.

Loans on livestock which were needed for a longer period than six months were also discussed. The Federal Intermediate Credit banks anticipate a good supply of funds through the sale of debentures.
