Camp Fire Fish Honor Won for First Time

Fifty-five Omaha Camp Fire Girls spent the past week at Camp Iwaqua, near Little Sioux, Ia. While they were there Louise Rosenthal won her fish honor. She is the first Omaha Camp Fire Girl to receive this honor. To the uninitiated the fish honor may seem an idle jest, but to win it Miss Rosenthal, who is a 16-year-old student at Central High school, had to swim 50 yards fully dressed, then tread in deep water and swim to shore—so successfully, 4 standard strokes, 2 standard dives, swim 30 feet under water, break 4 holds and demonstrate 2 carries.

To decorate the lodge Betty Everts and Inza Kinsey are making a mat using a Navajo hanging loom to work on and cat tails for the warp. Barbara Everts is making an Indian willow bed which will be used as a hammock.

The girls receiving exceptional nature honors for the week were Jean Whitney, Myrtle and Marjorie Oehlrich and Pauline Koppel. Pauline has made a specialty of butterflies.

Camp Iwaqua will be open three weeks longer, closing August 20. Registrations for camp are made at headquarters, 23 Patterson block.

Walking Club Encounters Many Omahans in Black Hills.

Members of the Omaha Walking club who are enjoying an outing in the Black Hills, S. D., were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilhelm, Mrs. Charles Offutt and Mrs. W. R. McKee upon their arrival in Deadwood. The Wilhelm party are motoring in the Black Hills region. In a tourist camp at Sylvan lake the walking club met Mr. and Mrs. David Shultz of this city and at Savoy they were introduced to mountain trout fishing by O. M. Taylor.

In the midst of Needle Rocks in Custer State park the party encountered W. B. Larzelere, a member of the Walking club who is motoring in the northwest country. Edwin Jewell, who is in charge of the outing, expressed surprise at the number of Omahans in the Black Hills. Some, he says, are camping, other are touring and many have settled there permanently. The party will return to Omaha Sunday.

Bridge Luncheon.

Mrs. B. J. Chivik entertained at bridge and luncheon at the Brandeis tearoom Wednesday for Miss Sylvia Eggleston of Sioux City, Ia., the guest of Mrs. James English, and for Miss Alice Casteel, whose marriage to Daniel W. Ingraham will take place on August 2. There were four tables of bridge.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

What Jim Showed Marge and the Promise He Requested. Mother Graham eyed me sardonically.

"Why do you try that wishy-washy, meek attitude on me, Margaret?" she demanded. "You know you don't want my advice about asking Jim to look for that escaped bootlegger, any more than a cat wants two tails, so why do you waste your time and mine with pretense?"

She gave me no time to protest her strictures, even if I truthfully could have done so, but jumped, instead, to the question I had hoped she would ask, for I knew that the answer would provide her mind with enough melodrama to keep her busy—or so I hoped—for a few minutes, at least.

"You said those little children were hungry and their father and mother were in jail. That's where half the people around here ought to be, but it must have been something unusual to land one of em behind bars. What have they been up to?"

I seized the heaven-sent opportunity avidly, and as rapidly as possible told her of the discovery of the still and mash by the troopers who were hunting for the escaped bootlegger and of the hurrying to jail of the man and woman who lived across the road.

"Serves 'em right," she said with a vicious little click of her teeth, when I had finished. "But isn't there a baby over there?"

"Yes, and it's a sick little thing, too. Katherine wants the mother brought back home as soon as possible."

"Then what are you dawdling around here for?" he snapped. "Here's about the only time that fool badge of yours will have a chance to be of any use. You probably can get the woman turned over to you for awhile, anyway, but don't wait till the baby's dead before you get her."

"It May Be—" "I'll start right away" I promised, and taking down my motor coat and hat, hurried outdoors before she should change her mind.

I had long guessed that my ridiculously melodramatic old mother-in-law was jealous of the tiny badge of the diplomatic secret service which my work with Lillian entitles me to possess, but she never had put her feeling into words before and I was anxious that she should not suspect the mirth which her absurdity gave to me.

My car stood in the driveway, just as I had driven it in from Mrs. Ticer's, but I did not at once get into it. Instead, I walked on to the barn, and found Jim standing by one of the small windows which overlooked the woodland to the rear of the farm buildings. He did not turn as I entered, but spoke in a low, tense voice.

"I think that fellow the troopers are hunting is in that first clump of evergreens, Miss' Graham," he said. "If he is, he can't cross to the other part without my getting him. But of course I may be mistaken. It may be just a tramp, or even somebody just going cross lots to the other road."

Jim Has a Plan. "I think it's the man they're after, Jim," I returned, and then I told him of the discovery I had made at the broken window.

"Then I was right," he said excitedly. "And he is there. Well, I'm going after him!"

"Don't take any risks, Jim," I pleaded. "The man's somewhat stolid face lighted with an expression I had seen once before when he enlisted for the war."

"I was a soldier, Miss' Graham," he said, "and if there's any risks I got to take 'em. But don't you worry. This isn't anything to going out after me under shell fire. Just don't let Katie know where I've gone until I come back."

"It won't be long until the other trooper returns from the village," I expostulated, "and then he can come over also. That young chap who is over there now wouldn't dare leave the house where he had been posted if the man he wanted were leaning over the front fence."

"I know," Jim smiled reminiscently. "I've seen fellows like that. But there's no use waiting for the other one. No telling when he'll get back, and this man out here isn't going to stay where he is very long. If you'll just not look toward the woodland as you go out, ma'am—as soon as you are gone, I'll stroll out, too, and whip around the corner of the barn to the orchard. And then I'll try to get as close as I can to him before he spots me."

"All right, Jim," I returned reluctantly, "but please be careful."

A jar of this delicious mayonnaise free

We are making this a special "get-acquainted" offer. It's good only this week. We don't want you to miss it, and you won't if you have ever tasted MacLaren's Mayonnaise. If anything in this world is entitled to be called home-made, it's MacLaren's Mayonnaise Products. We take the same fresh wholesome materials used by the housewife—pure oils, fresh eggs, spices and fresh fruit juices—and blend them into one smooth, creamy, delicious whole, no cooking, no flavoring, no preservatives. We follow the housewife's method exactly; except that we never have her "bad luck." Ours is the same every time. That's because we have so greatly improved her way of blending, and because we have brought measurement of portions to absolute accuracy. It is of no use to make something new unless you make something better; we believe we have—decidedly better. But the first taste will tell you more about its goodness, freshness and purity than anything we can say. And we would rather have you judge it than to take our word for it—we might be prejudiced. We make it perfectly simple for you to test it. For if, in your estimation, it is not the best dressing you ever ate—bar none—it won't cost you a cent. That's a fair offer, isn't it? "The proof of the pudding is in the eating"—that is the proof we offer.
