On the Bowling Green at Lakoma Country Club

The bowling green at Lakoma Country club, with a shimmering lake in near view, makes one wonder if he is in Scotland, but Nebraska sun and native speech dispel dreams of a distant locale. Outdoor bowling in the British isles during the summer replaces the winter game of curling. One of the most perfect bowling greens in the country is along the shore of Lake Merritt in Oakland, Cal. It was the inspiration for Lakoma's acquisition. John Bekins saw the game in the western Pacific coast and presented his club here with a green and two sets of balls. The greens are in use almost constantly, the game being exceedingly popular with both men and women. Heavy six-inch balls are used. Bowling, as played at a commercial alley, is quite a different game.

Mother and the Law. Edward Kaylin, 9 years old, of East One Hundred and Ninety-fourth street, New York, has probably never heard very much about the discussion of censorship for pictures and books.

But whether he knows it or not he has settled the matter for most sensible people. When the legislature of New York state was considering a bill to make it legal for children under 16 to go to the movies unchaperoned Edward wrote a letter of protest to the governor.

"Please tell me," he asked, "what good it is to pass a bill like that to a boy whose mother won't let him go there alone anyhow, law or no law." Now what Edward evidently had in mind was that the governor should go a little farther and either get out an injunction or send a policeman or something, to make his mother let him go, since removing the law was the least of his troubles. The insurmountable barrier was mother. And unwittingly Edward has put his finger on the very keynote of the whole problem, of good and bad movies, or books.

If mother isn't the insurmountable barrier against bad manners and bad morals and bad pictures, the law has a pretty slim chance. And for grown people who are out from under the sheltering care of mother, individual taste must ultimately be the same insurmountable barrier.

The trouble is that most people want to remedy things by what they think is the easiest way. They say, "There ought to be a law," and that settles it. That's the lazy man's way out of everything. Is anything wrong? "There ought to be a law." It's the same with the schools and the children. Are they careless or underfed, or sickly or unpatriotic or
