

Tories in England still are heating plowshares for the premier to walk upon.

Similarly, Poincare exhibits a lamentable misapprehension of the situation when he proposes to make adjustment with Germany on the basis of cancellation by the United States of any part of the debt owed by France, or any other European nation.

It does not call for any close analysis to discover the purpose behind the present maneuvering.

Persistence in a wrong policy never yet has brought a permanent settlement of any question.

Meanwhile, the United States is deeply interested in the outcome, but not to the point of intervening to save France from the result of its political madness.

FROM THE WRONG ANGLE.

May it not be possible that the present condition of unrest and dissatisfaction with things in general is due to the fact that we have been relying too much upon legislative enactment to produce prosperity, and relying too little upon individual initiative and effort?

Are taxes too high? Look to the legislature for relief, instead of getting right down to home conditions and curtailing expenses of a public nature just as we would our individual expenses when income failed to meet outgo.

Are conditions burdensome? Ask the legislature for a law, instead of looking the conditions squarely in the face and meeting them squarely and honestly.

It would seem that after a while it would bore into the mind that not all of our social and economic evils are solvable by legislative enactment, and that as individuals we must accept our personal share of the responsibility.

YES, OF COURSE, IT'S HOT.

But you simply can not cool yourself off by watching the thermometer, or cussing the weather.

Wherever there's a will a way can be found—even to cut the price of gas.

Anyhow, the moonshine massacre story was good while it lasted.

Speed boys will do well to avoid Council Bluffs hereafter.

I would write the song of the inward beat which charms, entrances and thrills.

WHEN HONOR SHINES CLEAR.

We read that rules governing amateur sports at colleges are not making amateurs but are making liars. This is sad, if true.

Now, the rules of golf are peculiarly adapted for the game because of penalties laid on the player for the conduct of spectators.

The point is not that Massara won, after a match almost as exciting and as full of thrills for the golfer as was that in which Bobby Jones beat Cruikshank, what Bobbie, for the national open championship.

If Gene Slattery had been less of a gentleman, he would be Omaha city golf champion; if Francis Massara had been less of a gentleman, he probably would not have won.

Now, according to the Department of Labor, man's proud position as breadwinner and family provider is passing from him.

When comparable groups of men and women are contrasted, women are found to be more generous contributors to family upkeep than men.

One of the handicaps woman in industry suffers under is the inequality in pay, and this is being taken up by various organizations for the purpose of bringing about a fairer basis.

The facts set out are not considered final, but are being used for what they are worth, and probably will be modified in some respects as a result of further investigation.

The president of the harness makers says the draft horse is staging a come-back, but that old-fashioned surry is gone forever.

Omaha automobile dealers and owners want about the price of gas in a very practical way, and will get results without waiting for a bunch of politicians to move.

Maybe it was the eternal fitness of things that put a socialist in the new German cabinet as minister of finance—a disciple of Marx to look after the marks.

A negro from Alabama who is earning $66 a week laying brick in New York says he is not going back to Dixie. His reasoning seems good.

President Coolidge says the privacy of the president today may be "likened to that of a goldfish in a globe." He is right, as usual.

Plenty of rain and sunshine yet to come will help stuff Nebraska's cribs and haymows full of feed for the winter. We may be happy yet.

Gloria Swanson does not mind appearing publicly in pictures, but she wants her operations all to herself.

Senator Moses also nominates Cal Coolidge for 1924. One by one, day by day, they are getting into line.

Wherever there's a will a way can be found—even to cut the price of gas.

Anyhow, the moonshine massacre story was good while it lasted.

Speed boys will do well to avoid Council Bluffs hereafter.

FOURTY-NINE

Presently the remnants of the Grand Army, worn, bent and footsore from their long march, are turning their way to Milwaukee, for the purpose of attending the 125th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

"THE SOLDIERS' REUNION."

"War has her victories, but peace has greater ones. The reunion of veterans of the war of the rebellion, just concluded at Central City, was a most significant and eloquent witness to the patriotism of the nation's soldiery.

When 500,000 veterans, bred with the sun and rains of four years' warfare, marched through the streets of Washington for their final review, many hearts were filled with anxious forebodings for the future.

What would become of such a vast body of men who for four years had left their farms, factories and counting houses, who had thrown aside the plow to take up the sword?

From producers they had suddenly become consumers, and their places at home were filled by others, who had taken the place of their fathers in the prosecution of the war.

Rome's greatest blows to civil government were given by the hands of her own soldiers after the close of victorious campaigns.

History affords no parallel to the dispersion of the union army at the close of the war of the rebellion.

As quickly as they had risen at the call of the country, they were to be disbanded. Returning to their homes, they either began anew to make for themselves places for the prosecution of the arts of peace, or, exchanging their faces west for east, they set out in a new soil to win their way among strangers.

The United States leads the world in aviation performance and engineering progress. While the European nations, and particularly the major belligerents in the war with Germany, have concentrated upon military establishments and upon subsidized civilian activities as military adjunct, the United States with far less expenditure, and lacking such artificial aid, has made a great advance in the substantial feature being the gradual acceptance by the public of aircraft as a useful servant in speeding up commerce and industry.

This is the substance of "The Story of Flying—Aircraft Year Book for 1923," just issued by the Aeronautical Society of America.

There are half a hundred full page illustrations, and 60 to 70 pages of aircraft and engine designs.

The Appendix includes a thorough tabulation of records, statistics, laws and facts, but those pertaining to other nations interested in developing the air. The statistical information, all of which is completely indexed, was compiled by the assistance of the United States War, Navy, Postoffice and Commerce officials and diplomatic representatives of foreign governments accredited to Washington.

The number of commercial aircraft in the United States is estimated at 1,200. Of these probably 650 were in the hands of fixed-base operators—those with fixed bases or other recognized responsibility.

In 1922 the fixed-base operators flew 2,846,037 miles, carrying 75,268 passengers and 110,523 pounds of freight.

The "Story of Flying" is written in popular style and an impressive collection of facts and data presented in such fashion as to make good reading.

Organization of the Farmers' Remedy.

Blackwell, Okl.—To the Editor of The Omaha Bee: The great farm conference have been held in some of the representative men from five different states have met in Wichita to discuss the problems of the farmer, and yet they have not suggested any remedy except diversified farming.

The farmer's remedy lies within himself and is within his own hands and that is the fact.

The farmers' remedy lies in organization, and it must be an organization of the farmers, by the farmers, and for the farmers.

It is a glorious thing to possess many talents, but one talent is sufficient in what we call the grim battle of life.

The Man of One Talent.

From the Daily Oklahoman. Whatever becomes of the intellectual prodigies that year by year see completing the college and university courses of our country and entering the wide ways of business and professional life? Rarely do we hear of the "honor" men and women of our American schools once they have left the academic studies of learning.

Years ago there was born amid the hills of Ireland a child of so little promise that his parents neglected to record the date of his birth.

It is a glorious thing to possess many talents, but one talent is sufficient in what we call the grim battle of life.

From the Wichita Eagle.

A Jingo Admiral.

On the occasion of the anniversary of the beginning of the world war there was a general peace movement with the slogan and object stated as "No More War."

As an antidote for the doctrine of peace thus spread, the organized Jingoists held several notable meetings and talked of the glories of war and the sanctity of bloodshed.

Here is the gem of Admiral Rodgers' bloodthirsty harangue:

"War is the agency whereby law is made to prevail when it is disputed by evil-doers, be they individuals or nations."

Of course nobody could conceive of a victorious nation being in the wrong. Law is made to prevail when it is disputed by evil-doers.

There are half a hundred full page illustrations, and 60 to 70 pages of aircraft and engine designs.
