Dinsmore is in Omaha to address the convention of the National Harness Manufacturers and Leather Goods Retailers.

There were more horses and mules in the United States in 1920 than ever before. With the business slump in that year came a marked falling off in the number of horses being bred and sold. But that slump is past, and the horse, according to Mr. Dinsmore, is beginning a phenomenal comeback as a draught animal.

There are now 1,500,000 fewer horses and mules in use in cities on account of the competition of the
