

Spanish Troops Driven Back by Morocco Tribes

Heavy Fighting Reported in Tifermin—Moors Are Equipped With Latest Type of Arms.

Madrid, Aug. 19.—Spain has lost 140 men in one of the most sanguinary battles of the Moroccan war at Tifermin, according to private message received here from Morocco. The fighting is continuing along the entire battle front.

To the right and left of the battle line the Spaniards are holding their ground against the attacks of the Moors, who are equipped with the latest modern arms, but the center of the Spanish front is losing ground. The commanding general, who arrived at the battle line, the under-secretary of war added, is doubtful whether the Spanish troops will be able to hold the ground, as the conditions under which they are fighting are extremely bad. Nothing definite has yet been learned as to the losses.

"For some time past," the under-secretary said, "the enemy increased his pressure on our advanced positions, culminating Friday in the cutting of communications with Farja. The commanding general ordered a composite regiment of infantry, for elite legionnaires and engineers to re-establish the communications. The Spanish forces dislodged the enemy after sanguinary hand-to-hand fighting which has caused heavy Spanish casualties. The Third battalion lost most of its officers and 40 soldiers were killed."

Chamberlain Sees Breakers Ahead

Former Member of British Cabinet Declares Entente Hanging by Thread.

Manchester, England, Aug. 19.—Addressing the members of the West Birmingham Unionist association Austen Chamberlain, former chancellor of the exchequer, declared "the entente is hanging by a thread any clumsy handling of the reparations question at this moment may snap that thread and undo the work of the last 12 or 15 years." He characterized the government's latest note to France as inconsistent, illogical and futile, and pleaded for caution in a situation which he said was fraught with peril for Great Britain, the allies, Europe and the world.

"Germany is almost at the brink of disaster and threatened with revolution," Mr. Chamberlain added. "It is in peril of starvation because of the reckless finance in which it indulged. The entente is in jeopardy and I plead for caution and foresight in saving it."

Socialists Send Ultimatum to Reichsbank President

Berlin, Aug. 19.—A concerted drive to compel the resignation of President Havenstein of the reichsbank reached its climax when the socialists served an ultimatum demanding that he resign before Monday. The socialists threaten to call upon the reichstag to cancel the reichsbank's autonomy unless Herr Havenstein resigns.

President Havenstein stuck to his post and gave no indication that he would surrender.

The indescribable financial chaos into which Germany has drifted since the Versailles treaty was signed demands a victim and the socialists are insisting that Havenstein be made the goat.

Boise, Ida., Aug. 19.—Harvesting of the 1923-24 crop of wheat in Idaho, Oregon and Washington is on full blast, according to a report on agricultural conditions for the Pacific northwest issued by J. H. Jacobson, statistician of the United States Department of Agriculture. The report covers the period August 1 to 15.

"The crop promises to exceed last year by 36,451,000 bushels," Mr. Jacobson stated. "Early returns from threshing machines indicate an average winter wheat yield for Idaho of 25 bushels to the acre, Oregon 25 bushels and Washington 27 bushels, considerably better than 1922, when 19.5; 20.1 and 16.3 bushels, respectively, were reported."

Fresh Trouble Camps Women Scrap Over Imperial Claims on Trail of Ex-Kaiser

London, Aug. 19.—A Sunday Express dispatch from Doorn says fresh trouble has broken out in the former Kaiser's family, the Crown Princess insisting that her children shall inherit the imperial claims, while Princess Hermine, the new wife of the ex-kaiser, insists on being called "kaiserin."

The Kaiser is said to have decided the point in favor of Hermine, but the two ladies are at daggers points and there is no real peace in Doorn yet.

Adams, not so very far from Vermont. "Ah then, you can understand what I tell you!" she said with satisfaction. "And in the phanton you jog through the village, past the church, under the elms, with the white houses each under its thick green trees, and such green, green grass everywhere—not like Italy, all brown and parched, and then down the road till the turn-off for Crittenden's. For, you see, I also go to Crittenden's. My Cousin Hetty's home is one of the three or four houses that stand around your great-uncle's house and mill. And so up the road to Crittenden's between the mountains closer and higher, up into the quiet valley." Her voice deepened on the last words, and so did her eyes. She was silent a moment, looking out unseeingly on the tropical palms and bright, huge flowers of the Pinedan gardens through which they were now walking.

She was asking him a question now. She was saying, "You're not really going to sell all that, to just any young man?"

"But really," he answered, helplessly honest, "it sounds wonderful as you tell it, but what could I do with it? I couldn't very well go to live in Ashley, Vermont, could I?"

"Why not?" she asked. "A good many people have."

"Why not?" he began, incapable of forming any answer, incapable of thinking of anything but the dark softness of her gaze on him. "Oh, yes, I know. Hoosick Junction. Oh, but I have other plans. I am going to go to China."

"China! Why to China?"

Neale lost his head entirely. He said to her rather wildly, "I hardly know myself why I am going to China. I'd like, if you will tell me—I'd like ever so much to tell you—about it. And see what you think. You know about Ashley, don't you?"

"He was aware that the last of what he had said had no shadow of connection with the first, but that seemed of no importance whatever to him."

Kuhn Preaches on Friendship

Duty to Regard World as Jesus Did, Presbyterian Pastor Asserts.

Rev. Albert Kuhn, pastor of Bethany Presbyterian church, in his sermon yesterday spoke on "The Friendship of the World." He chose the injunction of St. James, "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity toward God?"

"Some people seem to think," said Rev. Mr. Kuhn, "that St. James meant that we should all withdraw entirely from the world and avoid all possible contact with the world that God made."

"But if you read the saying of St. James in its setting in the fourth chapter of the letter, you will see that he refers to the special type of world which contains people who give themselves over to illicit pleasures. There is one friendship which is commanded, and another which brings despair and death."

"We are commanded to feel toward all the world as Jesus felt. He loved all creatures of God. But if the friendship of the world usurps the position belonging to God in our hearts, we are disloyal."

"This is a high standard to attain, but it is the only true standard."

"Seet Doon" Squelches 'Em.

London, Aug. 19.—There is a new cry in the house of commons. Before the advent of the Scottish labor members anybody making a breach of the rules was greeted with the cry, "Order, order." But the Scottish members are not so polite. The breaker of etiquette is now greeted with the epithet "Seet doon"—and the offending member rarely falls to.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Reason Officer Farrell Changed His Mind About Madge.

The request of the federal officer did not surprise me in the least. I had known from his searching look at me when Mamie was talking of the framed photograph which had so startled me, that he had appraised at its true valuation my denial of any knowledge of the pictured face. My answer to him was prompt, for there was no possible reason for my concealing the simple truth from him.

"I am not quite sure, of course," I said, speaking in the same low tones in which he had couched his request. "But I think the woman of the photograph has the apartment next to mine in New York. I have seen her only two or three times, but I am quite certain that she is the same woman."

He whipped out a little notebook. "Name," he said briskly.

"I told him."

"And address."

I gave that also, but reluctantly, for, remembering Dicky's strictures upon our abode, I anticipated the keen, almost suspicious look which the officer gave me when he had transcribed it.

"You say you live in the next apartment at the same address?" he asked slowly.

"Unfortunately, yes, until I can find more suitable quarters." I returned, making a mighty effort not to show the perturbation that was mine. "If you know the housing situation in New York, you probably can guess that I had no much choice when I found it a few weeks ago."

"No, I suppose not," he said a bit absently. "But that's not the best neighborhood for quiet folks. Now, Mrs. Graham, if you'll just let me have your full name, and your husband's business address, I won't need to detain you longer, thank you."

I yielded to a purely feminine impulse, and took my tiny badge of service from its hiding place and held it out to him.

"Perhaps this will be a better credential," I said.

He looked at it for a second, then laughed shortly.

"This will teach me a lesson," he said. "I thought that garrulous young fool who was here was talking through his hat when he said something about this. I beg your pardon, Mrs. Graham, I am sure, for my comments on your address. Of course, you know all about it. Have you a flashlight? No? Unfortunately I must not leave here myself until we get this evidence away, but the girl can go."

He swung open the door of the inner room so quickly that Mamie, kneeling with her ear against the keyhole tumbled into an ignominious heap upon the kitchen floor.

"I thought that was what you were up to," he said sternly, as he stooped and lifted her to her feet. "But what you heard didn't do you much good, now did it?"

"I didn't hear nothing," she returned with defiant resentment, and remembering the subdued tones of both the officer and myself, I realized that she spoke the truth.

"The better for you," Officer Farrell returned sternly. "Here," thrusting a flashlight into her hand, "take this lady over to her home, and then come directly back here. Good night, Mrs. Graham."

He bowed with courtesy, genuine albeit a bit stilted, and then I was outside, with Mamie holding the flashlight so that its lights illumined our pathway.

"The big stiff!" Mamie said angrily when we were safely out of earshot. "Why shouldn't I listen when he's talking, and find out what he intends to do with us?"

I paid a mental tribute to the girl's ingenuity. That her real reason for listening had been to find out whether I really knew anything concerning her aunt. I was quite sure, but I gave no hint of my conviction.

"You do not need to listen at doors to find that out," I said a bit sternly. "He doesn't intend to do anything with you except to keep you mother on the farm here until they have decided what to do with your father."

"But what are they going to do with my father?" she demanded.

"No one knows yet," I answered. "Do you know any influential people?"

"You mean rich people?" In her excitement she dropped back into the vernacular.

I gave an involuntary little sigh. "Yes, I suppose so," I answered reluctantly.

"Two, three," she counted. "Two our kind, one American."

"Then you had better go to see them and tell them about your father's trouble," I advised. "I think the officer will let you go if you ask him."

"Thank you," she returned gratefully, and then she was scurrying back across the road while I, entering my own door, prepared to face the interested quizzing of my mother-in-law.
