Burgess Bedtime Stories

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

A boasting tongue is sure to trip. And heedlessly to let truth all. —Old Mother Nature.

The Young Chuck Begins to Have Doubts.

The young Chuck, who had crept under Farmer Brown's barn, sat and stared at Robber the Rat with eyes that were round with wonder and admiration. Robber was boasting. He saw right away that the young chuck believed all that he was told. Now, one trouble with a boaster is that he never knows when to stop boasting. It was just so with Robber the Rat. To have heard him you would have thought that he was the most daring fellow in all the great world. You would have thought that he had been everywhere and seen everything and was afraid of nothing.

Robber was making the most of an opportunity. You see, he is an outcast and despised by all the people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest. None of them will speak to him or have anything to do with him. So Robber was making the most of this opportunity to appear all that he was not. He saw the admiration in the eyes of the innocent young chuck, and it tickled his vanity.

For awhile the young chuck drank it all in and believed every word of it. But though this young chuck was innocent and knew nothing of the creep into the head of the young chuck. Then just in the middle of one of Robber's most boastful stories there was a slight noise just outside the hole through which the young chuck had entered. The young chuck looked over there. A pair of greenish-yellow eyes were glaring in. They looked so fierce that the young chuck felt little shivers of fear began to creep over him. Then he remembered that Robber the Rat was afraid of nothing, and the little shivers stopped. Of course he was perfectly safe with such a brave fellow close at hand.

But when he turned to look at Robber he found a great change in the boaster. My, my, it certainly was a change. "Don't move," whispered Robber the Rat. "That is Black Pussy the Cat. You stay right here and don't move. She can't get in through that hole, so there is nothing to be afraid of."

The young chuck looked back at those glaring eyes, and he hoped with all his might that Black Pussy couldn't get in through that hole. He turned to ask Robber if he was sure of this. Robber wasn't there! No, sir, Robber wasn't there! He had stolen away without making a sound. The young chuck blinked.

"He is afraid," he said. "He is afraid," muttered the young chuck. "He ran away and left me here. He is a coward. That's what he is, a coward. Now, I don't believe a word of all the things he told me. Ugh! I don't like this place. I don't like that fellow. I don't like dirty folks anyway. I'll get out of here as soon as I can."
