Burgess Bedtime Stories

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

The Young Chuck Finds a Friend. When the young Chuck, who had gone out to see the Great World, found safety from Bowser the Hound in the old stone wall, Bowser wasted very little time. Bowser had chased too many people into that old stone wall to waste time trying to get at them or waiting for them to come out again. So he barked a few dreadful threats of what he would do to that young Chuck some day, and then

The young Chuck remained right where he was for the longest time. He was so frightened that he didn't dare poke his nose out. And how he did wish that he was back home' He almost made up his mind the he would go straight home as soon as it seemed safe to start. But when he thought of the distance and the dangers his courage failed him. probably would have remained right where he was the rest of that day had not a pair of bright eyes peeped in at that hole and discovered him. "Hello, stranger," said a small voice. "What are you doing in here? It must be that it was you that Bowser the Hound was making all that fuss about. He isn't anywhere around now, so you don't have to stay around unless you want to."

The young Chuck knew that this was a very small person talking, so he wasn't afraid. "Who are you?" he asked in his turn, as he poked his head out and discovered a small, very neat person with a pretty striped coat, and the brightest of

"I'm Striped Chipmunk. Goodness, you must be very young and innocent not to know who I am," was the prompt reply. "I live here in the old stone wall, and a very good place it is to live."

"Do you think that I could live here for awhile?" inquired the young

"There is no reason why you can' that I know of," replied Striped Chipmunk. "If you live here long enough you will learn a great deal of the ways of the Great World. It's the safest place I know of. You have run away from home, haven't you? Striped Chipmunk's eyes twinkled as he asked this.

The young Chuck nodded. "Yes, said he rather sheepishly, "I wanted to see the Great World. Does-does that dreadful fellow that chased me in here come over here often?"

Striped Chipmunk nodded, "Quite often," said he. "But don't let that worry you. As long as you do not get too far away from the old stone wall that fellow will be perfectly harmless. I'm a great deal smaller than you, and I'm not in the least afraid of Bowser the Hound." This comforted the young Chuck lasted only a week, according to the petition of Mrs. Verna Briggs, who is suing Carl Briggs for divorce. Cruel and inhuman treatment is the grounds on which she seeks divorce.

The bride was from Clarinda and the bridegroom, from Shenandoah.

"There are plenty of them," said

Striped Chipmunk. "I'll show you some of them."

Away scampered Striped Chipmunk along the top of the old stone wall.
