

Tree-Planting Nebraska Need, Editor Asserts

Colonel McCullough of Omaha Speaks on Forestry at Com- munity Club Meeting at Minden.

Minden, Neb., Aug. 29.—T. W. McCullough of The Omaha Bee, president of the Nebraska Forestry association, addressed the Community club of Minden at its monthly dinner here tonight. He had for his topic "Forestry in Nebraska."

Colonel McCullough paid tribute to Sterling Morton, Robert W. Furnas, Dr. George L. Miller, and other pioneers in the work, who did so much in their day to interest the people of Nebraska in the work of planting trees.

He also commended the acceptance by the state of the gift of Arbor Lodge and its grounds, to be maintained for the public as a memorial to its founder, and expressed the hope that in time the people of Nebraska would in other substantial ways remember the men who laid so well the foundation of the commonwealth.

Must Plant Trees.

Possibilities of forestry in Nebraska were told in simple sentences, pointing out what has been done and what is possible to do. The great need, but timber cultivation was emphasized by reference to the steadily increasing use of wood in industry and the arts, and the continually diminishing supply. Americans are using timber five times faster than they reproduce it, and they must mend their ways, or face a forestless future.

Nebraska has an immense area that is capable of bearing pine timber which now produces little or nothing. The sand hills region will be better grazing country if it is forested; planting trees in that desolate region will not only produce timber that is sorely needed, but provide good grazing ground for more cattle and sheep than now are fed there.

Many acres in other parts of Nebraska are now waste land, which could be made to bear useful trees. A farmer does not need a forest, but he does need a woodlot, from which he can harvest fuel for his domestic uses, and many a sawlog that will bring him lumber for his many needs.

Nature Limits Supply.

Farmers of Nebraska are paying a steadily mounting freight bill on lumber that could well be produced in the state. Cost of fence posts is mounting, not so much because of a combine control of the output as for the reason that nature has set a limit, and no longer grows the cedar trees as fast as they are used.

This can be remedied by the planting of cedars. Cottonwood, tolerated because it will grow rapidly and anywhere, now is in demand as the best wood for making containers for butter and other foods, for wooden shoes, and a variety of uses in industry. A useful tree costs no more to plant and raise than does one of little or no use, and when the people of Nebraska begin to plant and raise useful trees, ordering their selections according to their needs, they will realize the true spirit of Arbor day.

The sentimental side of tree planting, exhibited in the memorial highway for the soldiers of the land was highly praised by the speaker. Anywhere, now is in demand as the best wood for making containers for butter and other foods, for wooden shoes, and a variety of uses in industry. A useful tree costs no more to plant and raise than does one of little or no use, and when the people of Nebraska begin to plant and raise useful trees, ordering their selections according to their needs, they will realize the true spirit of Arbor day.
