Have Faith in His Ability If You Would Have Him Succeed

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 20 and in love with a man several years my senior. My mother objects as he gets small wages and only when he works overtime does he make a decent salary. We have intentions of getting married in a few years when he gets a better job and more money.

What shall I do? Shall I talk with him and tell him that it would be best for us to stay away from each other until such time comes or shall I stick to him until he makes good? There is always so much trouble at home on account of that one thing and my mother would like him very much but for that. It would hurt me very much to give him up, but if it is for the best I will have to. Please advise me as to what I ought to do.

Evidently you have not much faith in the man's ability to make good. Your letter seems to me as if you thought you could "do better," but want to avoid the responsibility of making the choice. Look at the situation honestly and decide whether you have enough faith, loyalty and patience to help him succeed. With the right woman to encourage him, he might make a big thing of his life—but with a doubting woman he is defeated before he really starts.

Perplexed: The mother has my sympathy and I hope you will be generous enough to send her pictures of the children from time to time and write her about them occasionally. "No doubt the woman is worthless, as you say, but can't you put yourself in her place and imagine how she must yearn for her children at times. A woman may sink to the very lowest depths, but you seldom hear of them giving up their children willingly. It is hard to kill the mother love. Under the circumstances I think it would be best for you to answer her letters, rather than your husband.

Afraid: Love that is real love doesn't "fly out the window" after marriage. When two people really love each other they are not going to forget the fact in a day or so. Of course, respect is a vital part of love. There is no love without respect. And there is no love without mutual sacrifice. A great teacher once said, "Greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friend." If both of you are willing to sacrifice yourselves for each other, and will keep your lives so clean that neither would ever be ashamed of the other, then I think you truly love each other. And there is no fear of such love ever leaving.

L. L. G.: Perhaps if you were married in a small city in Iowa the announcement would reach the Omaha papers unless an enterprising newspaper correspondent were somewhere about. I do not believe a license taken out in Kansas or South Dakota would be printed here. Practically all the Council Bluffs licenses are printed here, though. I am more sorry that I can say that the first letter was lost, but very glad that you persevered and wrote me again. I wish you all happiness.

Conic: How would it help matters if you were to tell your husband of this old love affair? The thing for you to do is to make up your mind to forget him. Had you married him, you probably wouldn't have understood him any better than his wife does. You have nothing to regret and everything to be thankful for so far as I can judge.

Fluff and Frizzle: A little less boy and more schooling is the best advice I can give you.

Good Looking Sailors: I never give introductions through these columns to people I do not know. It might be all right most of the time, but I would not feel right to recommend to each other people whom I do not know myself.

DENTISTRY THE CREIGHTON COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY... Leading Dental instructors throughout the United States have endorsed the equipment and clinic of the Creighton Dental College as being on par with the largest and best in the country.

"Don't do that," I interrupted. "He wouldn't want to leave his mother that long."

"Why?" Is she sick?" he asked, genuinely concerned, for he is very fond of our childlike little friend. I explained, and he was shocked indeed.

"The poor little sweetheart!" he exclaimed. "But if Edwina's going to operate we needn't worry. But I've got to have those clothes. And what's more, they've got to get here in time to go to the tailor's and be pressed before dinner-time, if you have to taxi in all the way."

"Wait a second," I said, and looking at my wrist-watch, I made a mental calculation. "I can catch that 8:23," I said, "which will get me to Marvin at noon. The next train from there will enable me to reach home about 4 o'clock."

A Happy Moment. "That will have to do, I suppose," he said reluctantly. "I'll stop at that little tailor's four doors from us and tell him to save the time to press the clothes at 4 o'clock. Don't stop for anything 'til you get them to him; he's a busy chap and independent as they make 'em. If you're not there on the minute you say he'll take up something else and you can go hang. And be sure not to go out anywhere else, even on an errand, until I get home. I'll be late and just have time to make the banquet."

"All right, I'll attend to everything," promised, the while I reflected that a hectic half-hour was in store for me. When Dicky is preparing to go to any function I feel as if I were in the center of a maelstrom, and when he finally departs I am as limp as if I indeed had been drawn through one.

"Good girl!" Dicky's voice changed subtly from a harrumphing note to a possessive, caressing one. "Tell me, do you love me?" It was a familiar query, almost a careless one. When Dicky is in good humor he often puts it at the end of his conversations, telephone or otherwise, as a sort of caressing punctuation mark. But it never fails to stir my pulses, no matter in what mood I am, and the present moment was no exception to the rule.

"What do you think?" I countered demurely. "I don't think, I know you do," he said, quickly assertive. "But say 'I'll!'" His voice held an imperative note.

"Silly man," I bantered, but I added what he had asked and turned from the telephone with the thrill known only to the "married and settled" woman who receives some fresh proof of her husband's love for her.

NEWS OF SCHOOLS and COLLEGES

Employe Lauds School Principal

Head of School of Individual Instruction Receives Praise.

The following tribute to her employer was written by Mrs. George C. Edgerly, principal of the School of Individual Instruction: "Executive ability and a charming personality do not often go together. Mrs. Pratt, owner and manager of the School of Individual Instruction, possesses both these qualities to a marked degree. Her executive ability makes everything move along in orderly fashion at the school."

Her manner wins parents, pupils and teachers and her personality is the spirit that motivates the school into a harmonious whole. Mrs. Pratt's love for her own three children overflows to all children. She is personally interested in each child that comes into her school and earnestly tries not to conform each one to a set curriculum. As the head of the school Mrs. Pratt is thoroughly competent. On her daily visits to each class room, the ventilation, temperature and appearance of the rooms are noted by her in a flash. The quality of the teaching, the conduct and spirit of the pupils next receive her attention. No error in facts, spelling, pronunciation or grammar ever passes unnoticed. It is an interesting fact that Mrs. Pratt's faith in her school led her when she had but 28 pupils, to buy and place in the school desks for 100 pupils, and from the beginning of the next semester every desk was occupied.

The same spirit caused her to keep fresh flowers daily, winter and summer, in the vases in each class room.

Armenians at Yankton School

One of the features of the coming session at Yankton college was the enrollment of two Armenian girls from Smyrna, Veronica and Ropic Armagharian. The sisters are daughters of an Armenian preacher who was a resident of Smyrna before the massacre and burning of the city by the Turks. They survived the disaster and were brought to the United States through friends and have secured an opportunity to continue their education at Yankton college through the Congregational Foreign Missionary Society.
