Young Man Not Worthy of Trust

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.
Dear Miss Fairfax: You said in an article that persons not engaged are free to see other friends, to which I readily agree, but I personally know of a case where a young man and woman were going about together and although they were not engaged they had confessed their love for each other.

Now on a few occasions this young man admitted having gone out with his sweetheart's closest friend, who concealed the fact at the time. He also admitted having told her that he loved her and it was well known that she admired him very much.

He found, after seeing this girl a few times that he did not care for her and wanted his old sweetheart back, but she decided that she could not trust him and told him she did not care to see him any more, but I know it hurt her very much to give him up. Now he does not see either of the girls.

Was the girl justified in giving him up or was she too hasty? Do you think this young man did the right thing?

When I said that there was no reason why a man and woman should not have other friends in addition to the "one particular one"—I was not suggesting deceit and double dealing.

One of the things which makes friendship and love most real is loyalty. The man who tells a girl that he loves her, but does not commit himself to an engagement and then slides about a bit looking over some other promising candidate for his affections is not worthy of trust, and the girl who refused to give it was quite right.

Canning Time.

The time has come to put up catsup and you are wondering why you throw away all those corks. Start a box right now and keep corks and pieces of paraffin from jellies in it and you will be very grateful in preserving time.

Bride Continues Studies in Law

Though she has a bridal apartment in the Tadousac to settle and then housekeep in, Mrs. R. L. Sattler is planning her fourth year in the Creighton law school this fall. Her only concession to the weight of her additional duties will be in lunching each school day with her mother, Mrs. S. S. Montgomery, who has also taken an apartment in the Tadousac this fall. "This will be an experiment," Mrs. Montgomery answered a reporter's question. "We will do all we can to help her, for she wants her degree in June; but, of course, her duties as a homemaker come first and the law will have to be dropped if she can't manage both."

Later in the winter Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery plan to go to California.

For Miss Hasler.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Reason Madge's Heart Warmd to Mrs. Marks.

I looked critically, anxiously at the coat Dicky held but to me with the assertion that he could not wear it to the banquet which he had counted on, and that therefore he would have to stay at home.

"What is the matter with it?" I asked. "I don't see anything. Really, Dicky, aren't you a trifle captious because you're prejudiced against Mrs. Marks? It appears to me to be pressed beautifully."

"Sweetly" would be a better word," Dicky sneered. "I'm not saying anything against the work," he admitted grudgingly. "She's as good as out for you. I have pressed my own things many times. Won't you let me try?" I purposely made my voice as coaxing as possible, and Dicky looked at me dubiously, but with a gleam of something very like relief in his eyes. "You can't make 'em any worse," he said at last, "and you might just happen to turn the trick. Here, let me show you what I mean by the right kind of crease."

"Just wait until I switch on the iron," I pleaded. "It can be heating while you tell me and then I won't lose any time."

I did not wait for his assent, but sped down the hall to the kitchen and, putting my ironing board between the table and a stout chair, switched on my electric iron and went back to the living room, where Dicky, with the aid of what he termed a properly pressed suit, showed me the difference between the creasings.

"This sort of a thing is the top of the milk for the week-end young men about town," he said contemptuously, "but I'd rather attend that banquet in golf knickers and the upper part of a pair of pajamas, than in these things as they are now."

"I'll do my best with them," I said, "only don't come near the kitchen unless I send for you. I shall be nervous enough without any suggestions."

"Much time I have for going anywhere," Dicky retorted. "Me for a bath and a shave. I'm going to have these whether you succeed in getting the lounge lizard creases out of the clothes or not, old girl. Give us a kiss."

I returned his caress dutifully, amazed by his evident belief that he had squared all accounts with the pseudo apology. Then with the suit which Dicky had pointed out as a model of pressing over one arm, and his evening clothes over the other, I proceeded to the kitchen.

The bathroom door slammed a few seconds later, and I knew that his bath and shave would keep him out of my way for a quarter of an hour at least.

I had no conscious thought of Mrs. Marks in my ultimatum to Dicky that I did not wish him to come near the kitchen while I was working at the clothes, but when I heard her tiptoeing into the room behind me, I realized that subconsciously I had been expecting her. She had a cheap tablet of note paper and a pencil in her hand and she held the tablet out to me.

"I don't care to say nothing out loud," I read in a round childlike script, "but I couldn't help hearing, and I know what he means. Just give me a look at the other suit, and I'll have those ready for you in a jiffy. You mustn't try them if you're not used to them. You'd spoil them."

I raised my eyes and looked at her gratefully, and with sudden, genuine liking in spite of her crudity and her doubtful surroundings. There were few women, I reflected, in any station of life who would persist in helping out a neighbor after Dicky's criticism of her efforts which I now knew she had

That there was something behind her offer besides sheer good nature I guessed, of course, but was content to leave its discovery to the future. For the present I was only too glad to surrender Dicky's suit to her capable hands and stand silently watching her while she efficiently brought them into the form he desired.

It's Time to Wake Up to the Important Changes Now Taking Place in Omaha!

A new epoch in the development of the city's business district is taking place.

THE THIRD EPOCH NOW IN PROGRESS

Omaha is developing by districts Business is expanding rapidly. The new area extends two blocks in each direction from the Court House Square.

OMAHA'S PRESENT CENTRAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT DISTRICTS

- 1 This is the Men's Club District; rapidly developing as an insurance and financial center.
- 2 This is the price appeal retail district.
- 3 This is the Moving Picture, Theater and Amusement District.
- 4 Court House Square, the present civic center.
- 5 The present Banking center—too restricted to meet future needs; probably will surrender to retail business within a few years.
- 6 Rapidly developing as a high-class automobile sales and service district.
- 7 An old section held out of use for many years, now starting to develop as an annex to the first-class retail district.
- 8 This is the "quality appeal" retail district in which are located stores known for dealing in high-class merchandise. In this district will be located the new Aquila Court Building. Every large city eventually develops a district of this kind.
- 9 A good district for Moving Picture Theaters, new hotels, railroad ticket offices, men's business enterprises that should be convenient to the depots and to wholesale business.

The Bankers Reserve Life Building and the Aquila Court Building will change the geography of Omaha

The black spot at the corner of 19th and Douglas designates the location of the new Bankers Reserve Life Building. This 10-story structure is elaborately trimmed with marble mahogany and bronze. The building brands the neighborhood with banking house quality and gives it a financial atmosphere.

The black spot on Howard Street, between 16th and 17th designates the location of the Aquila Court Building a structure covering half a block of ground. This building, constructed of Bedford stone, will provide stores for merchandise, shops for novelties, studios for artists and offices specially designed for every kind of business and professional services.

Business and professional men who appreciate a refined environment and who wish to be convenient to the many thousand men who use the numerous clubs in a circle around it will find it advantageous to establish in this building.

A high standard has been established and will be maintained. Only people of character, who offer first-class merchandise and first-class professional services, will be admitted.
