

Diamond Thief Is Believed Caught

Suspect Held on Third Anniversary of Theft of Omaha Woman's Jewels.

Three years to the day from the time the theft was committed C. W. Bergman was arrested in Milwaukee, at the request of Omaha police, as a suspect in the robbery of $1,500 worth of diamonds from Mrs. W. S. Fitzgerald, Omaha.

The robbery occurred September 13, 1920. The robber took the diamonds from the dresser in the room in which Mrs. Fitzgerald was sleeping. No trace of the thief could be found at the time. Circulars were sent out asking authorities to look for someone trying to sell diamonds of certain sizes.

Thursday a detective in Milwaukee, in looking through a book in which circulars were filed, saw this appeal of the Omaha department. He thought of Bergman, who was in jail and questioned him.

When he was confronted with the circular, Bergman is alleged to have confessed to the robbery. Chief of Detectives Charles Van Dusen was notified and wired that he would send someone to bring the man back here for trial.

Reaching the car, he found the occupant, aged about 25, living in Omaha, emerge, not much worse for the mishap, and explained his misadventure by saying that a hornet was trying to crowd him out of his seat in the coupe.

He withstood the first dagger plunge with heroism, but the next one was too much.

Nance County Fair Has Big Historical Pageant

Fullerton, Neb., Sept. 14.—Record-breaking attendance and attractions featured the Nance county fair, one of the chief attractions being a big pageant of floats entitled "The Progression of States and Mother Goose-land," planned and directed by Miss Chloe Badridge, county superintendent of schools.

The floats were elaborate, portraying the states by historical events, state flowers, products and state seals. Almost every school in the county took part in the parade. This is the fifth big pageant staged by the Nance county schools and was pronounced the most attractive yet. The other pageants were celebrations of the semi-centennial of Nebraska, the tercentenary of the landing of the Pilgrims, the holidays' carnival and the march of the nations.

The stock show and school exhibits surpass the displays of other years and the poultry, agriculture and art halls were overcrowded.

The one who very little knows, his ignorance will soon expose.

Peter Rabbit Grows More and More Inquisitive.

Spotty the Turtle had invited Peter Rabbit to go with him for lunch, and Peter was delighted. "You show the way and I'll follow," said Peter. "All right," replied Spotty. "You keep right at my heels."

Now Spotty was sitting on the end of a partly sunken log in the Smiling Pool, where for some time he had been taking a sun bath. No sooner were the words out of his mouth than he dived off the end of that old log into the water. Peter, sitting on the bank, waited for Spotty's head to appear above the surface. He thought Spotty was going to swim over to the bank where he was sitting and that then they would go together for Spotty to get his lunch.

So unsuspectingly Peter waited and waited for Spotty's head to pop out of the water. He waited and waited but there was no sign of Spotty the Turtle.

"This is queer," muttered Peter, growing more and more impatient.

"Why Didn't You Come, Peter?" He Asked.

make people cross more quickly than keeping them waiting. But still he waited and waited and waited. At last he began to think that some thing must have happened to Spotty the Turtle. He forgot his crossness and began to worry.

At last, just as Peter had decided that something must have happened, Spotty's head suddenly popped out of the water just beyond the edge of the old sunken log. Spotty's bright, little eyes were twinkling, but Peter didn't notice this. Before he could find his own tongue Spotty spoke: "Why didn't you come, Peter?" he asked. "I waited and waited and waited."

"You mean I was the one who waited and waited and waited," retorted Peter. "Where have you been all this time?"

"Why," replied Spotty, appearing to be very much surprised at such a question, "I have been having my lunch. Where did you suppose I had been?"

"Your lunch?" cried Peter. "What kind of a trick have you been playing on me? You invited me to go keeping them waiting. But still he snaking off by yourself. That's a nice way to treat an old friend."

"I didn't do any thing of the kind. You asked if you could go along with me, and I said I would be delighted to have you. You didn't come. That wasn't my fault. I went straight from this old log to where I knew I would find something to eat, and I didn't hurry either. In fact, I waited for you. You had to do what you followed me."

Sudden understanding broke over Peter Rabbit. I wish you could have seen how foolish he looked. "Do—do—do you mean to say that you got your lunch down under water?" he demanded.

"Of course," replied Spotty. "Where did you expect I would get it?"

"Why—why—why I supposed you would get it somewhere along the bank of the Smiling Pool," Peter confessed. "I was waiting for you to come back and show me the way."

The next story: "Peter Rabbit Laughs at Himself and Learns Things."
