

Householders Laud Suburban Police System

Pill Box Officers Efficient in Handling Work, Letters Say—Catch Robbers in Acts.

Efficiency of the police pill box system was praised again yesterday in a letter from George H. Hawkins, 2820 Ames avenue. Mr. Hawkins declared that in a time of need, he had received exceedingly prompt and efficient service from officers stationed at the Fontenelle park station.

"At 11:30 last Monday night," he says, "some degenerate cuss raised a small section of my brick walk and heaved it through the large glass of the window of my home at 2820 Ames avenue."

Then he tells how he called the central police station and motorcycle officers were at his front door almost before he had hung up the telephone receiver. His praise, he declares, can not be too high for such efficient work.

Mr. Hawkins is only one of many who praise the work of the "pill-boxers." This group of men under the leadership of Capt. Lyman Wheeler has given excellent service to the residents of Omaha during the summer.

The station at Fiftieth and Dodge streets has been praised on numerous occasions as has the one at Thirtieth and Vinson streets. On one occasion the officers stationed at Thirty-third and Cumings street captured a man who attempted murder by being ready to go on an instant's notice.

At Miller park and at Hanscom park the officers have been fortunate in capturing burglars in the act of robbing stores.

Every time such work as this is done several letters are sent to the chief commending the officers. The chief declares, and all other members of the department declare, that the pill box system is one of the most effective weapons against crime ever inaugurated in Omaha.

Huge Fiery Cross Lights Billings

Air Bombs Herald Bursting Into Flames of K. K. K.

Billings, Mont., Sept. 21.—Thousands of visitors to the Midland Empire fair were treated last night to a spectacle not advertised on the program.

At 10 o'clock the city was aroused by a continuous bursting of air bombs over the rim rock that surrounded the northern part of the city, followed a little later by the bursting into flames of a cross nearly 50 feet in height, the fiery cross of the K. K. K.

As the cross blazed, lighting the entire top of the hills, hundreds of red flares were touched off, and on the city, marched hundreds of white-robed members of the organization, carrying red and green flaming torches.

Just back of the edge of the cliffs were hundreds more of klansmen, forming a continuous moving circle, in which several hundred candidates were being initiated into the order.

Back from the edges of the cliff stood six buglers whose signals moved the white-robed members in their maneuvers. In front of the buglers burned the cross. To the right of the cross stood an American flag, and at the base of this was a large flat rock, used as an altar in the initiation ceremonies.

At the close of the ceremonies several aerial bombs were exploded and the entire assembly sang "America." According to officials of the clan, the meeting was a state-wide gathering, nearly 2,000 members, being present.

Why There Were No More Baby Turtles.

Spotty the Turtle and Mrs. Spotty had watched the bank down which two of their babies had come to enter the Smiling Pool. To these two babies Spotty and Mrs. Spotty paid no attention at all. By their actions you would not have supposed that they had the least interest in those babies. As a matter of fact they didn't have much interest in them.

As a father Spotty the Turtle is anything but a success. As a mother Mrs. Spotty is not much better. She considers her duty done when she has dug a hole in the sand, laid her eggs therein and then carefully covered them up.

Mrs. Spotty's interest in her babies was chiefly in finding out how many there were. So having seen those two enter the Smiling Pool, she and Spotty watched for more. But no more appeared. The next day they watched, but they watched in vain. Finally they decided that those two made up their whole family.

"Something happened to those other eggs," declared Mrs. Spotty. "As sure as you live, something happened to those other eggs. I laid a lot of them, and I buried them as carefully as I knew how."

Spotty yawned. "Do you remember where you buried them?" he inquired. "Certainly I do," replied Mrs. Spotty, rather sharply. "Then why don't you go over there and see if you can find out what happened to them?" asked Spotty.

"What good would it do?" retorted Mrs. Spotty. "No, thank you, I'll stay right here. My, how good this sun feels!" Mrs. Spotty made herself comfortable for a sun bath, and appeared to forget that there ever were any baby Turtles in all the Great World.

Something had happened to those eggs that Mrs. Spotty had so carefully buried. Something had happened to them very shortly after she

Harvard Cancels Contract For Summer Chautauqua

Harvard, Neb., Sept. 21.—At the regular meeting of the Community club it was unanimously voted to cancel the contract, temporarily entered into, for next year's chautauqua program. Due to general dissatisfaction of the way in which the chautauqua has been handled in recent years, it was decided to investigate fully the possibility of organizing local talent for the entertainment. This is the first time the chautauqua contract was not signed for several years, the programs having been put on in this community as a regular feature for the last several seasons.
