Keeps Family of Six on $3.60 a Day and Buys Home

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I think it was your department which caused much agitation over the amount a laboring man might save and support a family in meantime.

Yesterday I met a working man and asked him to account for himself. He said he had been working on a farm the last five years for three different farmers, but found it too hard a life so moved back to town. He has lived in town for a year and bought a house with two good rooms and two lots, less than a mile from postoffice and school for about $400 dollars. He had put in about $50 worth of material and his labor in repairing it outside of his working hours and had it all paid for except $20 and had supported his family of six in the meantime.

I asked him how he did it, he replied, "Sacrifice—sacrifice."

He said he preferred to sacrifice in such a manner for a few years and then expected to be rewarded proportional to the sacrifice made.

Did some one want to know his wage? He draws $3.60 per day.

He seemed happier over this record than his neighbors who call him a fool for missing so much sport.

SACRIFICE.

Twenty-one dollars a week certainly isn't much for a family of eight. Indeed, he would have to sacrifice and sacrifice, and so would his wife and family. I am glad he has a home of his own even if it has only two rooms for six people. No doubt he lives in a small town where there are some advantages in the way of expense.

Sets Wedding Date

Miss Charlotte Acer.

Announcement is made today of the wedding date for Wednesday, October 17, of Miss Charlotte Acer of New York to Sidney Cullingham of Omaha, son of Mrs. R. B. Howell, and Senator Howell. The wedding, which will be a very quiet affair, will be solemnized at Miss Acer's home. Definite plans for the ceremony have not been completed as well as the plans for their home afterwards. Senator and Mrs. Howell will go on for the wedding.

Miss Acer is a most accomplished young woman, who will be widely welcomed here by the friends made when her engagement was announced on a visit in June, 1922. She is a graduate of Chicago university and for two years a student at Smith college. Mr. Cullingham has been graduated from Lafayette college in Pennsylvania, where he was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

Miss Acer is deeply interested in politics, of which she has first-hand knowledge. During her visit of a year ago she and Mr. Cullingham accompanied Senator and Mrs. Howell on their primary campaign.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Why Should Dicky Be Angered by a Post-Card?

Dicky grinned reluctantly at me when he had finished his breakfast. His sense of humor could not miss the divergence between the bountiful meal he had just discussed and his previous protests that he could not eat a thing.

"I guess I can do as well with these few mouthfuls as some people could with a full meal," he quoted. "But I'll radio the fourth dimension that you're some cook, old girl!"

He was so obviously sincere that, woman-like, I felt my heart soften toward him despite the doubts of his loyalty to me engendered by the book inscription and the mystery of his accident.

Ironically, I commented to myself that if the surest road to a man's heart is through his stomach, one of the most certain ways of disarming a woman's anger is to flatter her about her ability to prepare good food. But the knowledge made my response to his flattery less cordial.

"Merci, monsieur!" I swept him a deep obeisance. "It is the great pleasure and privilege I have to cater to so distinguished and discriminating a patron!"

He raised his hands high above his head in mock surrender.

"Don't shoot any more!" he implored. "I'll come down. But take my advice, my dear. Never try the writing game. They pay by the word, not by the syllable, and you'd starve to death!"

Even though I knew that the words were the idlest pleasantry, I could not help wincing at the remembrance of less good-natured strictures which Dicky had uttered concerning my undoubted predilection for unusual words. It is a result of my love for the study of words and their origins, and I realize as well as my keenest critic that it sometimes makes me appear pedantic when I have neither the right nor the inclination to be so considered. But I let no hint of my chargin escape me.

"You underrate my miserliness," I retorted. "I should work with a thesaurus at either hand, and make 10 words grow where one sprouted. But a truce to nonsense. How does your head feel?"

"As if it were stuffed and trussed for roasting," he responded with the sulky pessimism almost anything masculine involuntarily assumes when questioned concerning his health, and I uttered the expressions of sympathy which I knew he expected, but which, characteristically, he dismissed with an irritable, "Oh, for the love of Mike, cut out the condolences!"

Characteristically, also, he apologized the next second in such royal fashion that I could not cherish against him any rancor for his rudeness.

"And I will atone," he chanted the famous line, though, incorrectly, as he finished. "I'll go to Doctor Williams right now, and set all your anxiety at rest."

"Shall I call a taxi?" I asked, rising and moving toward the telephone.

"Absolutely, also positively," he replied. "I've no desire to appear on the street in this decoration"—he touched the bandages around his head.

I secured the promise of an early taxi call, and he made a hasty toilet for the street, then walked restlessly around the room.

"Hello! what's this—unopened letters?" he queried, taking from the mantelpiece a package which I recognized with a start as the mail I had taken from the box upon my arrival the preceding day. The exciting whirl of getting Dicky's clothing ready for him, with Mrs. Marks' timely aid, had given me no second to look at them, and I had not thought of them since.

"And the third!"

"One of them? Li's by the writing," he said, tantalizingly holding the packet away from me. "The second's some club thing, and the third—" his face darkened suddenly as he looked at the postcard remaining, and he temperishly threw the letters and card on the table.

"I see Faithful Fido is still on the job," he snarled.

Australians Arrive.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Cornforth and 8-year-old daughter, Joan, of Melbourne, Australia, arrived Wednesday to be the guests of Mrs. Cornforth's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Ryan. Mrs. Cornforth was formerly Miss Mary Ryan. Mr. Cornforth is director and manager of the Vacuum Oil company in Melbourne. He is in America on business and will go on to New York Friday. Later he will join his wife here and in December they will return to their home.

Mr. Cornforth was born where the old postoffice in Omaha now stands. He likes Australia very much as a place to live. The climate is about that of California. There are no winters and the heat is not as intense as it was coming across Nebraska Wednesday, he said. The continent is larger in square miles than the United States and the population less than New York City, 5,500,000. Ninety-nine per cent of the people are British. The laws of the country exclude negroes and Asiatics.

There are about 500 Americans in Australia, according to Mr. Cornforth.

"Opportunities are there," he said. "While they have all the modern improvements of the states, yet their stage of development is about that of our own country following the Civil war. Australians are very hospitable and cosmopolitan. The social life is quite the same as ours," Mr. Cornforth said. They have no earthquakes or other natural disturbances such as cyclones and tidal waves.

Engagement Announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben M. Homan announce the engagement of their daughter, Violette, to Edward Fehrs. The wedding will take place early in October.

Two Girls Motor From California to Maine Alone.

Miss Maude Robbins and Miss Bess Dickinson of Los Angeles, Miss Robbins formerly of Stanton, Neb., and Miss Dickinson of Seward, Neb., arrived Wednesday to stop at the Fontanelle and to be guests of Miss Ida Smith. Both girls were students at Brownell Hall in the class with Miss Marion Towle and are well known here. They are very slight, each weighing under 100 pounds; but starting in June they have motored continually across the United States from Los Angeles to Portland via San Francisco without mishap. They are now en route home.

Miss Dickinson and Miss Smith have a friendship which dates from days when both were residents at Seward. Meeting a year ago in California, they renewed the acquaintance. This summer the three girls met again in New Hampshire.
