Peter Is Surprised by a Strange Dog. Peter Rabbit should have known that it was not safe to go far from home these beautiful fall days. Probably he did know it. Peter is old enough to know that when the sharp, with a total attendance of 33,000 to cool days, of fall come and the leaves its credit. turn to beautiful colors and begin to at hand. Then the safest place for him is right in the dear Old Briar Patch.

But on this morning he had gone some distance from it. It was a beautiful morning and Peter was feeling very fine.

"I feel like having a good run," said Peter to himself, kicking up his long "Yes, sir, I teel like having a good run. I would like to run a race with some one."

There was a loud sniff just back of Peter. It was exactly as if it were an answer to what he had just said to himself, for when he turned his head it was to discover a strang dog. It was a smaller dog than Bowser the Hound. And just by looking at him Peter knew that he could run vary fast, much faster than Bowser. Suddenly Peter wasn't quite so sure that he wanted to race some one that morning.

The dog had not yet discovered Peter, so Peter very wisely kept perfectly still. Perhaps that dog would not find him. back and forth, this way and that way, sniffing at the ground. Peter held his breath and waited, never once taking his eyes from that strange dog. At last that dog gave a yelp, and Peter knew then that his tracks had been found. The dog became excited. He yelped again, and then, as he got the scent still stronger, yelped the third time. Peter knew then that he would have to run. He knew that his scent was so strong that in a moment or two that dog would find him. Still Peter waited. He didn't intend to run until he absolutely had to. And while he waited he planned where he would run to. Meanwhile the strange dog drew nearer and nearer.

This was a most foolish thing to do, because it was taking a chance. On Farmer Brown's farm no hunting is allowed. You know, Farmer Brown's Boy keeps watch to keep all hunters off. But on this next farm hunting was allowed. That is why Peter was taking a foolish chance.

On this farm was a long, very thick, low hedge. Peter knew all about it, for he had been there before. So close together grew the bushes of that hedge that there was only one place that Peter could get through it comfortable. The fact is, Peter had made that hole in the hedge. It was
