Neglected Pillows

Not neglected in appearance, as no one overlooks changing slips regularly—

But Neglected in Cleanliness

Year after year pillows are used nightly, with rarely a thought of their sanitary and healthful condition. Yet in slumber much of the air we breathe is near to or exuded from the pillow when it is crushed by changing position.

Feathers have a peculiar affinity for dust particles, which not only soil the tick, but penetrate and accumulate with the feathers. It would shock you to know how much soil matter could be removed from the average pillow.

We wash pillows in their own ticks. Rain-soft water and mild soap suds penetrate and clean every feather. Then drying is accomplished by gentle tossing in a warm breeze of fresh air, until every feather is sweetly clean, dry and fluffy.

And, remember, you know, with this method, that you get your own feathers back—which is important.
