Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

How Dicky Had Come to Grief While Dressing.

I rushed into the bedroom to find chaos where I had left order, with Dicky nursing a cut finger and uttering picturesque oburgations. The dainty dresser cover was holed on half off the bureau. It was soaked with toilet water, smeared with cold cream and face powder, and on the floor I saw with dismay the broken fragments of cut glass and china.

I love dainty things about me, and at home where Dicky and I have our own rooms, my dressing table is fitted for the various toilet articles, most of which have been gifts to me. Because of our cramped quarters in the city, Dicky and I are compelled to share the single bureau, something we both detest, and I have kept all my dainty things in my fitted bag, and put on the bureau only the plainest and most serviceable of dresser sets in accordance to his preference. But because of our expected guests, I had pushed Dicky's things back as much as I dared, and decked the dresser top bravely. Any housewife who prizes her possessions knows how near I was to angry, rebellious tears. But even as I grasped at the dresser scarf to keep the pitiful remnants of my treasures from sliding to the floor, I forced my lips to a dutiful question.

"Shall I get gauze and water for your finger?"

Dicky forcibly considered the finger to a distant and unpleasant place.

"In the name of the Great Horned Toad," he shouted angrily, "what's the big idea of cluttering this place up with all these gimcracks? I can find a thing of mine, and when I finally located my collar box, and pulled it over here, it stuck and the whole mess came down. Look at me! These trousers will have to go to the tailor, pronto."

I had been only angry and chagrined before, but a note of bitterness entered my feeling at this point. He knew how I prized my dresser ornaments, he knew also how I worked to make the apartment attractive for the coming of the guests, but he had uttered no word of regret for the damage he had done. There had been nothing but concern for his own clothing, and concern for me. And I knew as well as if I had been standing next to him, that the whole thing was the result of his own carelessness.

I could visualize the impatience with which he had jerked the collar box toward him.

"Luckily, you have two pairs of trousers for that suit," I remarked calmly. "And if you don't mind taking care of that finger in the bathroom, I'll try to clean up here."

I was turning to my skirt and fastening it in the manner least calculated to crumple it as I spoke. And without another glance at Dicky, I reached past him into my part of the wardrobe, took down a big kitchen apron and tied it securely over my gown. I felt his gaze on the back of my head, and was not surprised to hear him say grumpily:

Lillian and Marion arrive.

"I've want any help?"

"No, thank you," I returned, involuntarily emphasizing the words more acrimoniously than I intended. "I can get along very nicely."

"Oh, go to the—" The person or place to which he sent me was lost in the slam of the door leading to the hall, and the next moment the sound of running water in the bathroom told me that he was attending to his finger, which I had seen was but slightly cut. I heaved a tiny sigh of thankfulness that I had not yet put my guest towels in place—long experience with Dicky has taught me to leave the final touches to my bathroom until about two minutes before the guests arrive—and after a trip to the kitchen for broom, I soon restored the room to order, although I ventured no further decoration of the dresser, contenting myself with a plain white cover, and only the most necessary toilet accessories.

With the refuse disposed of—I could have wept as I threw away the fragments of glass and china—I sat down in the kitchen to wait until Dicky should be dressed before I restored either bathroom or bedroom to the order in which I had had them.

But he delayed so long that Lillian's ring—three long notes and two short—which always heralds her, sounded before I had quite finished, and I was still in my big apron with flushed face and hair a bit disheveled, when Dicky, who had run townstairs at her ring, brought her with Marion to our door.

Fairmont Wedding

Mrs. George C. Halsey

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis H. Badger of Fairmont, Neb., have announced the marriage of their daughter, Mary Belle, to Mr. George Clinton Halsey of Central City, Neb., Thursday, October 11, at the Presbyterian study in York.

Mr. Halsey was born and reared near Fairmont and is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Badger, pioneer residents of Fillmore county. She is a graduate of the University of Nebraska class of 1911, and has been active in D. A. R. and genealogical research work, and is also a prominent member of the order of the Eastern Star and the Fairmont Woman's club.

Mr. Halsey is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Halsey of Chico, Cal., and has been engaged in farming near Central City since his return from France in 1919.

Mr. and Mrs. Halsey left immediately after the wedding for California to attend the American League convention. They will also visit Mr. Halsey's parents at Chico. After December 15 they will be at home near Central City.

Press Club Banquet.

The Omaha Woman's Press club has announced January 8 as the date for the annual banquet of the club. Prizes won in the club contest will be announced at that time.

Martha Allen PROBLEMS THAT PERPLEX.

Dear Miss Allen We are coming to you for advice as many others have done.

If boys you know, but do not like, ask for dances, how can you refuse them, but still be polite? If boys offer you gum in public should you accept it, if not how should I refuse? A boy I dislike very much has been asking to take me out in the evening, should I go or should I not?

I know a boy in our community who I love very much, but he will not notice me. What can I do to attract his attention? If boys you do not like mention sending flowers or candy to you how can you refuse them politely? Hoping to see our letter in print, we thank you in advance.
POPULAR AND JUST IT.
P. S.: We are 18 years old. It is very hard to refuse a boy

A dance just because you do not like him. Why not dance once with him. One dance in an evening with someone we do not care about will never do us any harm, but will make us unselfish and nothing is more attractive than an unselfish girl. I would advise you not to chew gum in public. Just thank your friends when they offer it to you and say kindly that you do not care to chew gum in any public place. They will think all the more of you for this. I would not go out with any boy I disliked. There is hardly anything you can do to attract the attention of the boy you speak of. Indifference is a very good way to attract a boy.

Always appear to be having a very good time with others whenever he is looking on and pay no attention to him whatever. Try this out a few times. Refuse candy and flowers that you do not wish by saying to your friends: "Please do not send me flowers or candy again. I would rather you would not do this." This can give no offense and is your privilege.
P. E. O. Delegates Return From Convention.
Mrs. Bertha Clarke Hughes, retiring president of the Supreme chapter of P. E. O., Mrs. M. F. Funkhouser, state treasurer and Miss Rose Owens, chairman of trustees in the supply department have returned from Seattle where they attended the national convention of the P. E. O. Sisterhood, October 2-5. Mrs. M. D. Cameron, state recording secretary, Mrs. Lulah T. Andrews, executive secretary of Supreme chapter, Mrs. T. L. Combs of chapter B. N. and Mrs. Frank Byrant, a past state president, are visiting in California enroute home. Mrs. Hughes was called home from San Francisco by the death of a brother in Denver. Mrs. V. I. Bowden of Brookfield, Mo., was elected supreme president, succeeding Mrs. Hughes. Bring the milk in from the step as soon as possible.
