

Maccabees May Build Camp for Girls, Columbus Plans Under Way for State Recreation Center Similar to Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp.

Columbus, Neb., Oct. 26.—Establishment here of a state camp for Nebraska girls by the national organization of the Maccabees is being planned according to Mrs. E. P. Dussel Post, commander of the local review. The project will be the most important topic of discussion at the world's state convention which opens its annual meeting in Columbus next Monday.

The association maintains a number of state camps for girls throughout the United States, established under the supervision of the national headquarters. An appropriation has been made for one in Nebraska, but the project has gone no further because of the apparent lack of a suitable site.

Mrs. Kate Swan, Kansas City, commander for the department including Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Colorado, and Miss Della Hall, Fremont, state commander, have both inspected the proposed camp site here. They have declared themselves more favorably impressed with Shady Lake, north of the city, as an ideal site because of its boating and bathing facilities than with the projects under consideration by the Omaha and Grand Island reviews, which have been unable to present the organization with a site as readily adaptable as the one here.

Members of the review have obtained from Adam Smith, owner of the lake, two lease propositions, either of which would run for 15 years. One comprises the acreage tract in which the lake is located, including the buildings. The second proposition would be a five-acre tract immediately west of the park line and having a frontage on the lake.

Wherever the organization maintains such a camp it is open to all girls of certain ages, regardless of whether or not they are members of the association. It is conducted throughout the summer and similar to the Y. M. C. A. state camp for boys, already located here, which gives health programs along lines of physical training.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Mrs. Schwartz Did Not Follow.

"Why don't you go on down, Margaret? I shall do very nicely now." Harriet Braithwaite's tones were steady, her face and eyes seemingly calm. Yet but a few seconds before she had dropped her stately mask and revealed her frightened, anguished soul to me. I knew that though I had been privileged to reassure her, yet she was still shaken, and instinctively I turned to commonplace as the best aid to her returning composure.

"You will find fresh towels in the bedroom," I said casually. "And while I am here I may as well show you what you have in your little pantry. I brought up small portions of coffee, tea, sugar, butter, condiments, flour, eggs, bacon, cereals and fruit. And there is ice in the refrigerator. But don't you think you'd better let me get your breakfast in the morning? I'd love to."

She had walked with me to the pantry as I talked, and with a practiced housewife's eye she ran over the things I had brought. "You thoughtful girl," she exclaimed. "You even have remembered the material for Edwin's favorite muffins. No, indeed, I'm not going to let you get breakfast for us. This will be great fun for me, house keeping this way. Where can I get—" "Milk, cream and rolls delivered each morning," I interrupted. "I only have to speak to the men who bring mine, so just give me your order before you go to bed tonight."

"I'll give it to you now," she said practically, and she named the amount of the articles she needed, while I mentally jotted them down. Then, with the feeling that she needed to relieve more than anything else, I hurried downstairs.

In Time to Help Lillian. Lillian—flushed and anxious—was in my tiny kitchen bending over pots of steaming vegetables. Cooking is not her special forte and she turned a relieved face to mine as I entered the kitchen.

"I believe in fairies," she announced dramatically. "I just wished my particular guardian one would materialize you. Look at these dratted things and tell me if they're all right. I did exactly as you told me."

She hovered at my side with an anxious eye while with a practiced hand I tested the potatoes and the snap beans, which I had planned to serve creamed, a favorite dish, I remembered, of Edwin Braithwaite's.

"They're perfectly all right," I said, and she drew an exaggerated long breath of relief. "Allah be praised!" she intoned, just as a heavy step sounded in the hall and the rubicund janitor appeared at the door, bearing aloft the roasting pan containing my chickens.

"Mamma, she fixed them all nice for you, Miss Graham," he said, his beaming face. "There was too much water in the pan so she poured it out, and she made such a nice gravy."

My heart descended to my boots with startling rapidity. I am fustily particular about the preparation of my gravies, especially those of fowl. I knew before I tasted it that the gravy would have too much fat for the water and flour and that it would be pregated so strongly with onions and the herbs with which so many cooks, especially foreign ones, think it necessary to disguise the taste of fish, fowl and flesh that no one would be able to distinguish it from a gravy served around roast pork or beef.

Madge Is in Despair. But the mischief was done, and the janitor's rosy, beaming face made me force my lips to a mechanical smile at the words:

"How nice of her, Mr. Schwartz! That was very thoughtful, indeed. I'll come down and get the squash right away."

for you, too, all nice mit a sauce. I will bring it up right away." He hurried out, and I sank into a kitchen chair with a helpless, hopeless look at Lillian. "Taste that gravy," I said beseechingly. "I can't bear to." She did as I asked. I knew she would not soften her verdict and I was not surprised at the grimace she gave as she laid down the spoon. "It's the usual thing," she said. "All the flavors and condiments in the world stuck in together. I could wring her neck. I love your delicate gravies! I wonder if she's stuck any cloves or cinnamon in the chickens! If she has, she might just as well make her will, pronto. Let's investigate!"

In Love--But Too Young to Be Out at Night

By MARTHA ALLEN.

Omaha.—Dear Miss Allen: I have read others' advice so I think I will come to you for some. I am not allowed to go out with boys at night as my parents do not believe in it and I do not myself, as I think I am too young. However, I am considered good looking and also popular among both boys and girls. Now I have a boy friend who I like pretty well, who is of the same religion as I am. My other best boy friend is of a different nationality and religion, but I love him and I am sure he loves me. If I go anywhere, such as a party, play or rehearsal, should I ask him to go. As he doesn't go to the same school I do or know any of my personal friends? Or should I not say anything about them to him? I would not be ashamed of his company and he shouldn't be of mine. I wrote him a note this week, but have not yet got the answer. Do you think that was the wrong thing to do?

MISS POPULAR.

It is just as well not to write notes to your boy friends unless there is some special reason for doing so, such as an invitation to a party, a note of thanks for a gift, etc. I see no reason why you shouldn't enjoy the companionship of the boy because he is of a different religion and nationality, but get the love idea out of your head, my dear. You may think you are in love with him, but at your age one is apt to fancy herself in love when it is merely an infatuation. You will have plenty of time for love affairs when you have finished school.

Is He Married?

Dear Miss Allen: I am in love with a man and know that he is in love with me, for he has been coming to see me every night and has sent me flowers while I was in the hospital. But a girl friend of mine told me he was married. What do you think I should do? LONESOME.

You owe the man a chance to clear himself—or acknowledge the truth of what you have heard. Don't take it for granted that your girl friend was properly informed. One does not condemn a criminal unheard, so surely one doesn't judge a friend until one has given him a chance to speak for himself. If this man is married and has not been honest with you, you must put him out of your life.

Wymore, Neb., Oct. 26.—Ku Klux Klan posters, each surmounted with a fiery cross emblem and announcing a meeting of the clan to be held in a hall here on November 2, were found pasted on the front of all business houses on the street, and on the sides of autos which were parked late in the streets. The posters were placed some time after midnight. It is understood an executive speaker of the organization will be present and a local Klan established.

Spokane's Wet Days Jag Arrests Records Broken Last Month

Spokane, Wash., Oct. 26.—All pre-Volstead records were shattered in the number of arrests here for drunkenness during the month of September, Police Secretary W. L. Jackson announced. An even 400 sobered up in the city jail, the records showed.

Police Chief Wesley Turner attributes the increase in the policy of the department to arrest all persons who appear on the streets showing signs of having been drinking. The largest number of drunkenness arrests during any one month previously was 350.

Family Barely Escapes When Farm Home Burns

Wymore, Neb., Oct. 26.—Fire, supposed to have started from an overheated stove completely destroyed the large frame farm home of Floyd Andrews, east of here, near Liberty. The fire started in the night and the family was asleep in second story rooms. Smoke awakened them barely in time for them to escape with a few articles of clothing. Mr. Andrews was forced to drop from an upstairs window to escape. All of the furnishings and a quantity of canned fruits and vegetables in the basement were destroyed.

Bathing a la Nature May Become Rage on Santa Monica Beach

Santa Barbara, Cal., Oct. 26.—Bathing a la nature on the ocean beach in the evenings and early morning may become the custom in this city, as it has been discovered that the old ordinance in force in Santa Barbara does not require that bathing suits be worn at night. The law provides that suits must be worn between the hours of 6 o'clock in the morning and 8 in the evening. It makes no provision for suits the rest of the 24 hours. It has been known for some time that bathing parties have been held sans suits, but it was not known that the return to ancient customs had legal backing.
