

Intersection of Harrison street and Washington avenue in Council Bluffs. Water rushing down Harrison street undermined the brick paving and then turned into Washington avenue with similar devastation.

Sun rising over the Blue river after the flood.

In the Path of Wind and Water

SOME STRIKING ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE DAMAGE DONE IN NEBRASKA AND COUNCIL BLUFFS BY CLOUDBURST AND TWISTER

ALL PHOTOS BY DEWELL

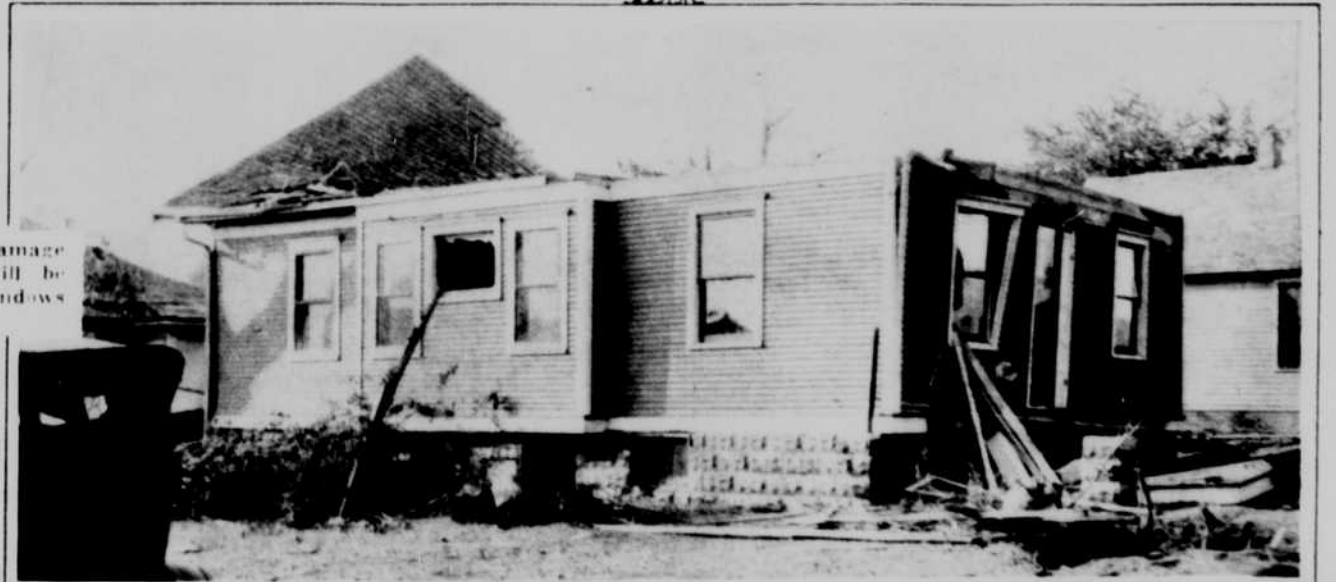

Upper Harrison street where the flood began.

Old Dobbin and his brother help their owner pick up a few dollars rescuing marooned motorists at Ashland, Neb.

In spite of the great damage done to this house it will be noticed that some of the windows remain intact.

A section of the D. L. D. highway in Nebraska after the rain.

The gridiron of the New Thomas Jefferson High School in Council Bluffs became a veritable lake. These four youngsters improvised a raft and started a ferrying business at 50 cents a ferry. Left to right: Roy Holland, 2409 Avenue A; Malvin A. Haxt, 2502 Avenue B; Howard Mayberry, 108 North Twenty-fifth street; Francis Suttlin, 2503 Avenue A.

In the Platte valley, the home of Edmer Harris completely surrounded by water.