Golden Quest Abandoned
When 'Copper' Specimens
Reveal Content of $422 Per Ton.

Laramie, Wyo., Oct. 27.—Mining men here were agog over the recent discovery of platinum ore near Centennial in an ancient copper prospect at which Jacob Schnitzler, veteran prospector, has been scratching away for many years.

As platinum is worth $118 an ounce, the search for gold has well nigh been forgotten by the lean and patient mountain men who have been searching for that metal since Laramie was a tent city on a blizzarded plain. There is much of romance in the reported discovery by Schnitzler. For more than 30 years he has been prospecting in the mountains behind Centennial and had great hopes of finding rich copper veins in a prospect overlooking the middle fork of the Little Laramie. It was with this hope that he sent a sample of ore to an assaying company at Denver, and it was with copper in mind that the assayer made his tests.

Platinum, according to local mining men, is practically unknown outside of the Ural mountains in Russia. If the old Rambler mine near Encampment be excepted, so the Denver assayer was surprised when the first test showed a native platinum content of $12 to the ton. He immediately realized that much platinum must have been lost in the five-cent platinum occurs in combination with arsenic—and a second test, by water, bore him out in this conclusion. The water test showed that the platinum content of a small sample would run $422 to the ton.

It is this that the mining men are buzzing about. It is the greatest find since gold was discovered in California. Besides platinum, the ore shows boracite, covellite and calcopite, all rich in copper, but the platinum is the big thing," say mining men here.

Centennial is in the foothills of the Medicine Bow range, 30 miles due west of Laramie. It is on the Colorado, Wyoming and eastern railroad, and about 35 years ago was a boom town for a short space, following the discovery of several rich pockets of pure gold. Since then prospectors have lived and died in these hills, hoping for another pocket or a rich vein. The Rambler mine at Encampment, once famous for its copper output, and where small quantities of platinum are still mined although the amount to the ton is so small as scarcely to pay, is in the Saratoga valley, directly across the mountain range and about 35 miles from Centennial.

Connecticut Has Low Smash Rate

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 27.—Railroad trains and autos came together in 36 collisions in Connecticut in the first seven months of the year, the state motor vehicle department announces, killing three and injuring 17. Connecticut is lucky, the department believes, for the state has one-eighth of all the autos of the country, and if it had one-eighth of all the crossing fatalities—which total 1,820 throughout the land each 12 months—the list here would have been 142 deaths in the seven months. The 1923 record is 23 motor vehicles hit by trains and 13 trains hit by motor vehicles, while the 1922 record was 22 machines hit by trains and seven trains hit by machines.
