Woman's Club Meets

Next Convention at Grand Island; Dr. Bailey Speaks of New Tendencies in Religion.

Announcement was made at the Omaha Woman's club meeting Monday afternoon that the next convention of the Nebraska Federation of Women's clubs will be held in Grand Island. "Grand Island has never been hostess to the state meeting and has the advantage of being centrally located," said Mrs. O. Y. Krings.

Reports were given at Monday's session held in the Burruss Nash Auditorium, on the state meeting of last week held in Beatrice. Mrs. S. H. McKelvey discussed legislative matters presented to the state delegates. Mrs. F. H. Cole presented the educational side of state club work and Mrs. H. J. Holmes reviewed the address of the state president, Mrs. Edgar Penny, now retired. Mrs. O. Y. Krings gave a general report of the meeting, discussing especially the matter of redistricting the state and the appointment of an executive secretary.

"Redistricting has been postponed," said Mrs. Krings. "The clubs will not redistrict for a time, hoping that the congressional districts will lead the way." The present objection to districts is that the sixth is too large for satisfactory club work.

Regarding the appointment of an executive secretary, Mrs. Krings said one would be appointed by the state board at a salary not to exceed $1,200 a year.

Dr. Ralph Bailey of the First Unitarian church gave the talk of the afternoon on "Modern Tendencies in Religion." He said the tendencies are:

1. Disposition to stress activities rather than reflection.

"Religiously, we are a generation of Marthas, cumbered about much serving and careless to seek the sweetness and light from whatever truth may be at the heart of the universe."

2. Sure and cumulative trend toward triumph of the spirit of friendliness.

"This deserves our unqualified approval," said the speaker. "Religious persecution in all the forms in which history has known it, are mostly in the past."

3. Trend to discover and repress new sins.

"There is a new moral code, some say," the speaker continued. "But I say it is an extended application of the old principles of righteousness. We live in a different social order and have an enlarging conscience."

4. Effort on the part of the present religious world to enlarge the scope of the ministry of salvation.

"The new salvation tends to save people from their ailments. Wherever we find a church which offers to heal, great crowds attend the ministry. There is, then, this ministry of feeling, having the psychological tendency."

5. Growing tendency of organized religion through and against social and economic conditions in the interest of more abundant life for the people.

"The church is helping to create a public conscience; it has a vision of a better world and is co-operating with social service agencies, bringing together the collective forces of reconstruction."

Wife's Terrible Temper May Separate Them, She Fears

By MARTHA ALLEN.

Dear Miss Allen: I have never written to you before, but always read your splendid advice to others, so have decided to come to you with my trouble.

I'm married, and I love my husband as much as any human can love, and he says he loves me the same. We are both in our early 20s, he being two years my senior. We have been married only a little over nine months. He is a good provider and is good to me, but the trouble is this: I have a terrible temper when I get mad. I've tried, oh, so hard, to overcome it, and I really believe I have to a great extent; and when I do get angry I say and do things I'm sorry for afterwards, but that don't help matters after it is done, and he says he loves me just the same. But where I blame him is when an argument starts he keeps it up instead of dropping it. And one word leads to another until my temper gets away with me. And then my nerves give way and I start to cry. I can't help it, and then he gets mad when I cry and starts scolding. Now, who do you think is to blame? I've always taken the blame for everything, but really, right down in my heart, I don't feel like it's all my fault. This may sound silly, but it certainly isn't. We can't live this way all our lives, but I'd rather be dead than lose him.

I hope to see my letter in The Omaha Bee soon and will accept your advice, no matter what it is.

"BROWN EYES."

You must learn to control your temper if you expect to find happiness. It will be hard at first, but you are bound to succeed if you make up your mind to conquer it. A bad temper not only makes us unhappy, but affects the health as well, causing head aches, indigestion, nervousness, etc. I read a very interesting book by O. S. Marden called "Peace, Power and Plenty," and learned some startling facts about a bad temper. If you can get a copy of it at the library I would advise you to read it carefully. Perhaps if you can make your husband see how hard you are trying to conquer this failing he will make an effort to help you. It would be better, of course, if he didn't argue with you, but perhaps he, too, has had a time as you do in controlling his temper. It looks to me as if you were both to blame.

Dinner Over, Dicky Took Marion Out for a Lark.

With a satisfied air Dicky glanced around our improvised dinner table of which Lillian had made so lovely a thing. That he had enjoyed every bit of the home dinner I had prepared for our guests against his protests, I was sure, and I knew something else also, that he was distinctly proud of me for having accomplished what he deemed the insuperable task of serving a creditable dinner in such cramped quarters as our tiny apartment.

"Dishes first, I imagine," said Harriet Braithwaite practically, "with us all helping."

"I'm the ninth assistant secretary of the Dish Washers' union," Dicky drawled, "but I don't see what's the rush."

"If you were out on the farm, we'd show you," Lillian said, "I'm sister-in-law look up quickly at the nickname which Lillian has used for so many years that it has become automatic with her. Relic of Dicky's art student days when he was one of a little clique to whom Lillian was sister, comrade and adviser, the sobriquet never has been allowed to perish by his friends. That it offended Harriet's fastidious taste, I knew, but aside from the startled glance, she betrayed her feeling in no other way."

"It's a lucky thing for you the kitchen is so small," Lillian went on. "More than two people in that kitchen would fall over each other's feet, to say nothing of the dishes. So on behalf of our friend and host—" know a delicate brown, so—"We shall cheer you to a chunder," Lillian interrupted, "and with that delightful prospect in mind, I'll relax my ryes about late hours for once, unless Marion is too tired to go."

Her face was perfectly serious as she finished, and we all spouted with laughter at the delighted child's fervent response.

"Too tired! Oh, Mother!"

"Come along, Marion, before she changes her mind," Lillian looked her young daughter over, pulled a plait of her dress in place here, smoothed a refractory curl. Some time during the table-setting period she had put Marion into a dainty frock suitable for the evening, and the child was a most attractive picture with her winsome face and eyes starry with excited anticipation.

"Get your cloak and hat and run along with Uncle Dicky now," she said, kissing the child fondly, and in another minute Dicky was escorting the little girl downstairs with the air of one spreading a cloak before a royal personage. Edwin Braithwaite's eyes followed her until the door hid her from sight, and then he gave an unconscious sigh. If ever denied fatherhood was in any man's face it was in his, and I did not dare to glance toward my sister-in-law, for I knew what agony was in her heart.
