Postscript Cruel of Woman's Letter

Tells of Real Cause of Indecision in Few Words at End—Man Thrifty and Parents Approve—Difference in Religion.

By MARTHA ALLEN

DEAR Miss Allen: I now have a problem before me which has caused me a great deal of thinking. So am coming to you for your good advice.

Two years ago my cousin made me the acquaintance of her cousin and his folks. He and his folks have been great friends of mine ever since.

Where my most trouble is I do not know if I really love him. I do not long for him when he is not in my company. I have never gone with boys before.

If his closeness with money is thick it is a fine thing to find in any young man. Consider it to be that before you call it stinginess.

Always write a note of thanks after you have been a guest at anyone's home, whether it be at the home of your fiance or just close friends.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Lillian Took Up the Book Containing Dicky's Prototype.

"I'm coming too, Edwin," she said. "I'm more tired than I thought."

"For sliding down the ladder and getting into your clothes on the way, commend me to a physician's wife," she commented.

"The thing that did happen," she said laconically.

"He might not have been so good a surgeon," I protested, a feminine illogical ranting of my sympathies with my sister-in-law impelling me to a contradiction of the very judgment I had mentally pronounced upon the Braithwaite menage.

"Stiff, also yet and again, nonsense," she retorted. "Responsibilities bring out the best effort in the right kind of people. But a truce to them! Let's get at those dishes and then we can talk. I don't suppose you care to exchange any confidences in the kitchen."

"Not with Mrs. Marks on the other side of that thin partition," I replied, and for the next hour we worked, swiftly, and for the most part, silently, exchanging only the most necessary and casual of words.

"My should you sell your pretty hands?" she inquired, smiling broadly.

"Now mine, dot's all they're fit for. Did you like the gravy?"

"I rose to the occasion, and emulated a former prince of Wales, rejoicing that I could add an item of real truth through the aid of the repeated helpings of the sauce garnished squash which Dr. Braithwaite and Dicky had demanded."

"Mens always like dot sweet sauce," she commented complacently. "I thought you'd be glad I fixed it up for you. But you must never have so much water for your gravy. Now—"

"I was just about to call out the reserves," she said when I entered. "I'll wager a helping of that sweet sauce," she grinned maliciously. "You've been listening to a cooking lesson."

"The head of the class for you," I returned crossly. "Will you tell me why a woman like that is never satisfied unless she is instructing some one?"
