

Honeymoon Spoiled by Bride, Claim

"I Don't Care for You. I Only Married You to Get Alimony." Her Words, Mate Says.

The honeymoon of Gail W. Furness, 26, assistant superintendent of the Equity Life Insurance company, was short and devoid of the happiness usually associated with that time and filled with trouble, according to a divorce petition he filed in district court Friday.

Just one month ago he went to Chicago and wedded Helen Jones, who formerly lived here and whom he had courted for three years and corresponded with and given a $1,000 engagement ring.

Right after the ceremony they started for Omaha. In the sleeping car his bride said, according to the petition: "I don't care for you. I only married you to get alimony."

Arriving here, they went to the apartment he had engaged in the St. Clare, 2315 Harney street. But his bride did not change her attitude. The petition states they never lived as man and wife.

Furness' work takes him out of the city some of the time. When he returned from a trip he found his wife's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Melborn Jones, had taken up their residence at the apartment.

He found also that his wife had run up bills totaling $1,300 in Omaha stores, purchasing many things for herself and her relatives.

Then Furness went to the police. His brother-in-law, Jones, was arrested Thursday and was fined $25 in police court for vagrancy.

He was compelled to turn over to Mr. Furness a handsome overcoat which Mrs. Furness had bought for him on her charge account.

Then Jones was rearrested to be held for further investigation.

As for the alimony which the bride is alleged to have mentioned on the honeymoon, there will be "nothing doing," absolutely, short of the highest court in the land, declares Mr. Furness.

Mrs. Marie Furness, at her apartment declared that she plans to file a cross-petition to her husband's suit for divorce.

She also said that when her husband left town, he left her with unlimited credit, and that she did not believe the purchases she made on accounts which he opened for her were a financial blow to him. She denied that the purchases totaled between $1,200 and $1,300.

She also absolved her brother from all blame in connection with the affair.

"I made the purchases myself, because I wanted to," she said. "He had nothing to do with it."

She planned to go to the jail this afternoon, she said to pay his fine.

She is a daughter of Dr. Richards of Des Moines, formerly of Omaha.

which has flown out of sight," insisted another.

And so they argued and argued, watching the one black speck in the blue, blue sky which they could see. Presently that black speck grew larger—larger and larger it grew. It was coming down.

"What did I tell you?" cried one. "It is Old Mr. Buzzard and he is coming down. That man-bird isn't anywhere to be seen, but it is up there somewhere in the blue, blue sky, for I can still hear the noise it makes."

It was true. Old Mr. Buzzard could be clearly seen now, but the man-bird could not be seen, although it could still be heard. Blacky the Crow looked around at all the other little people. "Old Mr. Buzzard has lost the race," said he. "I have an idea he knew he would lose it before he started. He went because we made so much fun of him. His pride was hurt, for you know he was very proud of his flying. His pride is still more hurt now. It is going to be very hard for him to come back and face us. He thinks we'll make fun of him. Instead of that, let's give him a great welcome. Let's tell him that he is just what he is, the most wonderful flyer in the Green Forest."

Poor Old Mr. Buzzard! He was a long time coming down. You see, he couldn't bear to think of facing all his neighbors down there. He was tempted not to go back at all, but to start at once on his long journey to the Sunny South for the winter. But he knew that if he did this they would all remember it, and he cried Blacky the Crow. And all the others joined with him.

"Hurrah for Old Mr. Buzzard!" cried Blacky the Crow, and all the others joined with him.

Old Mr. Buzzard didn't know what to make of it. He blinked his eyes and looked as if he thought his ears must have fooled him.

"Hurrah for Old Mr. Buzzard, the greatest flyer in all the Green Forest!" shouted Blacky the Crow, and as before, all the others joined with him.

Old Mr. Buzzard began to hold up his head. It had sounded as if Blacky meant just what he had said. Old Mr. Buzzard held his head still higher. Then all his neighbors, talking all at once, began to tell him that never in their lives had they seen such flying, and how proud they were to have such a wonderful flyer in the Green Forest. The best part of it was that Old Mr. Buzzard knew that they meant just what they said. When at last they had all departed and left him alone, Old Mr. Buzzard settled himself to rest. His pride had been restored. He couldn't beat the man-bird, but he was still the best flyer among the birds.

"Ah! never boast again," said Old Mr. Buzzard. "No, sub, Ah! never boast again." And this was a very wise decision on the part of Old Mr. Buzzard.

Old Mr. Buzzard's Return.

The little people of the Green Forest gathered around Old Mr. Buzzard's favorite tall, dead tree and stared up at a tiny speck high up in the blue, blue sky.

"It is Old Mr. Buzzard," declared one.

"No it isn't, it is that man-bird," declared another. "Old Mr. Buzzard has flown clear out of sight."

"No such thing. It is the man-bird
