a paddle fish? Frank Rudat of Columbus caught one stranded on a sandbar in the Platte river. The paddle fish is a frequenter of the southern Mississippi river and has never been seen in this section before.

The fish Mr. Rudat caught has a flat beak, 12 inches long, two inches fore.

The fish Mr. Rudat caught has a flat beak, 12 inches long, two inches wide and about an eighth of an inch thick, all solid bone. The eyes, set just above the nostrils, are located at the point where the paddle bill begins. The fish weighs 12 pounds and with the bill is three feet long. The gills run completely around the mouth, which is about the same size as that of a 3-months-old calf. It has a lody resembling that of a catfish.
