

Americanization Is Discussed by Womans' Club

Dr. E. C. Vermillion of Akron, O.; Miss Alice Loomis and Mrs. Eva Morse Are Principal Speakers.

"Every American woman should assist in educating the foreign-born women," declared Dr. E. C. Vermillion of Akron, O., former state director of Americanization for Ohio, who spoke before the education department of the Omaha Woman's club Monday afternoon in Burgess-Nash auditorium. Dr. Vermillion, who is on a lecture tour in the interest of Americanization, came to Omaha for the state meeting of teachers last week.

"It is the personal contact with these foreign-born people which will bring results, and we cannot hope to educate them until we show a friendly and neighborly spirit toward them," he said. "The best results can be gained through the foreign-born women, who are beginning to take an interest in school affairs and citizenship since the vote has been given to them. In adult education, it is necessary that the teachers be specially trained for the work, as it is far different from teaching the child the English language."

The speaker was introduced by Miss Ella Thorngate, local director of Americanization in the public schools.

Miss Alice Loomis, director of the home economics section of the Nebraska board for vocational education, told of the work that is being accomplished in her department. "If we are to help the foreign born, we must first teach them to read and write in our language and secondly educate them along the lines best suited for their needs," she said. "Only 2 per cent of our people are reached through the universities and 85 out of every 100 leave the public schools at the age of 16."

Mrs. Eva Morse, assistant director of adult education, working under the Omaha Board of Education, told of the work that is being accomplished among the foreign born at class school.

A survey will be taken the week of November 18 to determine the amount of illiteracy in Omaha, according to Mrs. F. H. Cole, leader of the education department. The department meeting two weeks hence will be devoted to illiteracy.

Andrews Discusses Women in Politics

Former Congressman Says Woman Equal With Men—One in Cabinet Possible.

In the near future, women in politics will stand equal without regard to sex. This statement was made by former Congressman William E. Andrews of Hastings in an address before members of the political and social science department of the Omaha Woman's club at their meeting held yesterday afternoon at the Y. W. C. A.

"The time will come soon for cold intellectual analysis," he said. "The greater the study in your women's organizations, the greater the opportunity in politics."

"The question of a woman in the cabinet will depend a great deal upon the president in office," said the speaker.

In a sketch of republican and democratic government from 1856 to 1922, former Congressman Andrews with statistics discussed contemporary national political problems.

Mrs. Draper Smith introduced the speaker.

Panel Hammer Is Being Used Here

Crumpled automobile fenders are being restored to all their pristine beauty by the Pfeiffer Top and Body Corporation, by means of a panel hammer, the only tool of its sort in this part of the country, according to officials of the company.

With the coming of cold weather, the company is busy building tops for all makes and models of cars. Light weight, low priced curtains with window glass panels also are being installed on many cars, according to officials of the concern. These curtains may be folded up and placed under seats when not in use.

Mrs. Merrill Coed Asks About Spooning Lectures

Which Way Will Man Jump in a World Revolutionized By Science.

Mrs. Anthony French Merrill, who has been coming to Omaha for many years, giving a series of six lectures in this season, opened her 1823 course Monday morning at the Blackstone hotel. Several hundred women filled the lecture room on the eighth floor. Mrs. Merrill's subjects are on current literature and drama. Broadly speaking, Mrs. Merrill's first lecture dealt with the course of man in a world changed and changing by scientific discovery.

"Science has revolutionized living more than war or politics," she said. "Science has moved faster than the spirit of man. Man the child, we see everywhere in the world today. How can man acquire ability to use well the developments of the age?"

Books and articles cited by Mrs. Merrill along this line were:

"Gifts of Science to the Age," by Sir Richard Gregory. This book, as the title implies, enumerates the new gifts of science to man. "Anyone who has seen a baby drinking tomato juice, fruit juice or vegetable soup from a bottle, knows that the old theories about food are melting away," she said. "What to eat, and what not, has become a burning question."

"The science of nutrition as well as the whole field of new conclusions as to what we are, and what we need, are broken to us gently," the speaker informed. "In 'Outlines of Science' by Arthur Thompson. A text book for the race." Mrs. Merrill called the book which comes in four volumes. "The New World of the Atom," by Prof. W. L. Bragg. In the July number of the Yale Review was recommended by the speaker as an illuminating article on the great unsolved atom.

"The new psychologists are studying the cat," Mrs. Merrill informed. "They know the history of the cat, its reaction to training, education and environment. They have worked out its processes learnedly, and yet no one can prophesy where, in a new situation a cat will jump, because there is within him," she said, "that germ of life which is incalculable. The mystery of man is profounder than that of the cat. What can man make of the forces and powers newly placed within his grasp? Which way will he jump?"

"The Adventure of Living" by Lynton Strachey, an autobiography, treats of this incalculable germ of life. "The old theory that progress is inevitable is taken up in 'Modern Progress and History,' by Dr. Walsh and 'What is Progress,' by Robert Shafer," according to Mrs. Merrill.

Mrs. Merrill named as handicaps of today, (1) a loss of the great certainties, (2) trying to be clever instead of good, and (3) worry about money affairs.

"Man does not live by knowledge but by his great certainties," said Mrs. Merrill. "Dr. Jung's new book, 'The Psychological Types,' deals with man and these certainties among them, love, hope, duty and particularly religion."

Girl Says She Is No Highbrow—Is Perfectly Normal—Her Doubt Means Hope.

By MARTHA ALLEN.

COLLEGE Bred writes that she is anxious to know if it isn't common to spoon. Her question is not prompted by any highbrow attitude, she asserts. A perfectly normal person is what she calls herself. She answers her own question indirectly with that "isn't." Higher education is beginning to have its effect upon the girl because of the verdict already made as to spooning, its commonness. A ray of good judgment is shining through the haze of romantic longing. If college has this effect upon the younger generation every effort should be made to send all boys and girls there. Perhaps a course in "The Hymns of Piousness" would be helpful. If common, it is assumed the young woman means cheap and that with that word in her mind she should realize nothing worthwhile is cheap. It is a universal habit of all love seekers to spoon, and is just like any other habit, hard to overcome. One kiss might not do any harm but many persons know when to stop. If the start isn't made on spooning, the habit is something you'll not have to fight against.

Bob: If your face is long and thin, bobbed hair would be becoming to you, I should think. The newest style of "bobs" made up with hair cut to a length covering the ears and cut quite closely to the back of the head. If you curled the cut locks it would make your face seem a little wider.

Anna: There are no set rules for travel in a parlor car. Tickets for reservations on a parlor car are usually purchased with the railroad ticket. If there is no parlor car on the train consult the ticket agent as to a seat in the Pullman car if you are going only a short distance.

Anxious: Girls of 14 and 16 years seem rather young to have beaux. Your parents will have to settle the question of the hour you should return home.

Janet: Showers for brides-to-be are many, such as articles for the kitchen, linen, lingerie or handkerchiefs. A shower of cosmetics always meets with approval. Gifts are usually unwrapped in the presence of the guests so that the honored one may express her appreciation.

M. J.: Be sure that your diet is correct before you try to clear a bad complexion with facial applications. Eat only vegetables, lean meats and fruit for a month or two and see if your complexion doesn't improve. Rich gravies, heavy puddings and fat meats are harmful. For the pimples and blackheads put hot cloths to the face until the skin is red. Then rub a good lather of soap into the skin, rinsing with warm water, and then use cold water to close the pores. Your skin may peel when this treatment is first followed, but there is no need to worry. New skin is what you probably need.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Lillian's Viewpoint Comforted Midge.

"From the standpoint of strict justice," she said slowly at last, "there is no reason in the world why you should trouble yourself to make the best of Dicky's flirtation with another woman." She repeated my words colorlessly, without stressing any one of them, but I winced as if she had weighted them with irony. "But—would you be happier if you didn't make the best of it? If you would, I should advise you to make a row or cut loose from Dicky altogether. At that, those two courses mean the same thing eventually, you know."

Yes, I did know. I acknowledged that as I shrank involuntarily from the picture she had limned for me with so few strokes. Dicky might indulge in futile rage, as evanescent as they were tempestuous, but something within me, a knowledge of my Peter Pan born of my love for Lillian, told me that if I descended to the jealous raving fury over his derelictions which many women would have meted out to him, he might accept the first one as a proof of my love for him, but it would be the beginning of the end for us both.

Nothing Save Annoyance. But it was the alternative Lillian had named which stripped the little anger from me, leaving only the stark realization of what life would mean to me were I to "cut loose from Dicky altogether."

I knew, of course, that if ever I became convinced of his ceasing to care for me or of his allegiance to another woman, I should find pride and courage from somewhere to go out of his life altogether. Deep in my heart, however, although often clouded over by jealous fear, lay the consciousness that Lillian was right when she said that Dicky was essentially loyal to me, and that I had nothing save annoyance to fear from his occasional flirtations.

It was a long minute before I could speak. Then I looked gratefully at Lillian, and murmured a wan "thank you," which brought her suddenly across the room to my chair. She bent and kissed me warmly, rested her hand upon my shoulder for an instant and went back to her seat.

"I know," she said, comprehendingly. "Nobody better. It's undiluted—perdition—for women which Miss Head Sets Wedding Date January 3.

A most auspicious start for the new year in social circles is the wedding of Miss Vernelle Head and Raymond A. Baur of Paris, which will Romance After Tragedy. I had suspected for some time that her affair with the famous artist, Robert Savarin—the idyllic romance which had begun in Lillian's young girlhood, and had been resumed after years of tragedy had saddened both their young lives—was not going smoothly. No one who saw them could doubt their deep love for each other, but ever since the memorable day at his sister's, when Robert had betrayed his dislike for Lillian's government work, and the jealousy that was in him against any personable man with whom that work associated her, I had guessed that Lillian was weighing very carefully the possibilities and probabilities of unhappiness to them both should she link her life to his. Was it possible that she finally had severed definitely the "no between the?" Her letter had told me about Robert and his sister were about to start for Europe, and that she and Marion were cutting short their visit on that account. I had wondered at the sudden decision, so unlike Robert Savarin's dreamy deliberations. Did it mean that the two had come to the parting of the ways?

For Miss Emily Burke and Her Cousin. Mrs. Edward L. Burke has issued invitations for a bridge to be given Tuesday evening in compliment to her daughter, Miss Emily, who returned Sunday after seven months spent in Europe and in New York City, and for her nephew, Albert Kent, who leaves soon to make his home in the west.

So Gameleddin Journeyed to Abyssinia

GREAT was the glory accorded a prophet of Mohamet who journeyed to far countries to spread the Moslem faith. So Gameleddin, Mufti of Aden, set out on a mission to Abyssinia.

Returning to Aden he told of a drink which had refreshed and sustained him through all the hardships of travel, and approved the use of this drink by the followers of Mohamet. Thus, coffee received the sanction of the Moslem Church.

Gameleddin, however, knew nothing of the delicious goodness of such coffee as you may enjoy—M. J. B. COFFEE. M. J. B. COFFEE gives you the utmost in coffee satisfaction.
