Child Needs Are Explained at Yates School

Parent-Teachers Association Meeting Is Addressed by Dr. G. A. Young on Child Nerves.

"There is a tremendous amount of nerve development in the first three years of a child's life, and the greatest physical care should be given during that period," declared Dr. G. A. Young, who spoke on "Nervousness in Children" before the Yates Parent-Teacher association Wednesday afternoon in the school auditorium.

"All other parts of the body grow more slowly," he stated. "The child shows the need of sleep, and in the first few weeks, should sleep 20 hours out of every 24, and from 13 to 15 hours until they have reached the age of 3. During the school years up to the eighth grade, the child should be in bed by 8, and by 9 on school nights, while in high school.

Regular Habits Essential.
"The development of regular habits, sleeping, eating, cleanliness, order and the training in some definite creative activity is of the greatest importance."

Physical disturbances such as bad tonsils, eye strain and stomach disorders should be treated. The development of intelligent, sympathetic understanding between the parents and the child is most essential. A dictatorial attitude on the part of the parents is bound to bring conflict. While an occasional spanking may be valuable as an indication of authority, Dr. Young believes that the best results are gained by example. Movies are bad for the growing child as they develop too much fantasy, and we find the child indulging in day dreams to the exclusion of normal, healthy activities.

This should be combated as vigorously as possible. Showing off children makes them over estimate their importance, and the self-willed child is at a disadvantage in learning his proper relationship to society.

"The mental traits of the child should be carefully watched and their questions answered intelligently. Tell them simple facts in a simple way but give them the truth. If a child has enough mentality to ask questions, he should be given an intelligent answer.

Need Plenty of Food.

"As the child needs practically twice as much food as the adult, they should be provided with three wholesome meals a day, a lunch after school hours and when necessary, cod liver oil after each meal for a month or two, to aid in growth producing. Outdoor exercise and the opportunity for play, not only for the children's enjoyment but for the social contact with other children is most important."

Symptoms of nervousness, which Dr. Young defines as an emotion of fear, are usually found in the slender, anemic type. Fear, shyness, backwardness with children, a tendency to get off in a corner and read, night terrors, twitching of the body, physical complaints such as headaches, fainting, stomach disorders and an abnormal appetite are all symptoms of nervousness. "Nervous reaction in adults is often found in the child. Much is being done for the nervous child through the clinics," he stated.

Papini's Book Reviewed by Rev. Casady.

Papini's "The Life of Christ" pronounced by many reviewers the best nonfiction book of the year, was reviewed by Rev. Thomas Casady at All Saints church Wednesday afternoon before the book review section of the Omaha College club. Miss Bertha Neal, president.

"No book is more significant of the emerging consciousness in religion," said the speaker. He continued: "Papini does not contribute anything that is new about Jesus as a man or deity, nor anything new from a historical standpoint, but there is in his book the message of a soul. If he has done nothing else, Papini's book is justified for the way he makes clear the psychology of sin in a non-technical way and the joy of repentance and forgiveness."

"The book is a challenge. It purports to be that. It flaunts this man Jesus. Unless you have a facility for forgetting, or can read books without spiritual sensitiveness, you'd better not read this book. It is full of glowing power. It burns into your consciousness and sears your life. It is not a white-livered book. It is courageous. It fearlessly presents an extravagant interpretation of our Lord. There is no broad-mindedness about it. It is the voice of a prophet, a cry in the wilderness of a materialistic age. It brings Christ near and makes him most an Oriental of nineteen centuries ago, but an eternal person."

"In his book, Papini accepts as absolutely, entirely and literally dependable, the four gospels, the traditions of the apostles and the church itself."

"The book is in no sense propaganda or a denominational work. It has the Roman Catholic church as a religious background and as a personal background the life of a man who had been despised among sinners (in the author's opinion of himself a man who persecuted the church, then felt the futility of his life, the oppressiveness of sin, became converted and dedicated his life to making Christ plain to the world. "Papini accepts the miraculous in the life of Christ without a moment's hesitation, but he presents Christ not as one come to overturn and antagonize natural laws, but as one who would reveal the heart of God. He goes to any extreme to support literal interpretations."

"From an intellectual standpoint, the greatest part of the book is the author's interpretation of the sermon on the Mount. It is difficult to make the sermon thrilling, but Papini does that.

"Whatever is had in the book so far as use of unlimited description, is found in the period dealing with the death of Christ."

"The book will live because (1) It affirms the gospels as true and that is what the emerging generations wish to believe. (2) It affirms that a Christian life is possible on earth and people want to believe that. (3) It affirms that the Christian life is the only way to happiness and preservation of the race. (4) It affirms that Christ is with us today, effective and operative."

Mrs. W. H. Walker and Miss Byrd Craig are spending a few days in Creston, Ia.
