

Kansas Woman Kills Wolf in Chicken Yard

Dogs Come to Aid and Permit Death Thrust With Pitchfork.

Cottonwood Falls, Kan., Nov. 7.—Savagely attacked by a wolf which entered her chicken yard, Mrs. J. E. Adams, her back against a wagon and a pitchfork in her hands, fought for her life. Mrs. Adams is the wife of a Toledo township farmer and lives about seven miles northeast of Strong City, Kan.

Mrs. Adams was attracted to the chicken yard by a disturbance among her fowls. She at first thought the animal was a large coyote and that she would frighten it away but it turned and rushed toward her.

Mrs. Adams fled toward a wagon, hoping to gain the protection of a hay rack on it, but failed to do so. She barely had time to snatch a pitchfork and to turn before the wolf was upon her.

The woman succeeded in striking the animal twice and this made the wolf wary. It paused, awaiting an opportunity to attack and preventing flight to shelter.

The wolf swiftly changed its tactics, and running to the other side of the wagon rushed upon her. By a lucky thrust, Mrs. Adams pierced the wolf's neck and managed to hold its pincion to the ground. Two small dogs, seeing the animal at a disadvantage, sprang upon it. The wolf struggled free but was so distracted by the dogs that it was unable to defend itself further against the woman's thrusts and Mrs. Adams struck the beast down with a blow on its head.

Feeders Find Profit in Handling Yearling Calves

Plainview, Neb., Nov. 7.—A drove of yearling calves, numbering about 200, passed through here en route to one of the big stock farms east of here.

The yearlings will be fed during the winter and prepared for the market sometime next year. The feeders here say these calves bring a very good return on the time and money invested, as their growth at that period is much more rapid than it is when they are taken later and fattened, with not much margin to depend on except an advance in market prices.

Trenton, Neb., Nov. 7.—As Section Foreman C. M. Odell and his four helpers were coming in on their motor driven car, a heavy iron bar slipped off the front of the car, caught under a tie and lifted the car off the track. The car was going about 15 miles an hour. All the men were thrown from the car. Mr. Odell was badly cut about the head, his abdomen was pierced, probably by the upper end of the bar.

A doctor was summoned, a passing automobile was hailed and he was carried up to the doctor's office. He regained consciousness, but died about an hour after the accident. His son, Amon, who was one of the crew, was badly bruised about the head. Mr. Persinger, another of the crew had his collar bone broken and his head was badly lacerated. The other two men suffered minor bruises. The battery box of the car was broken, otherwise the car was not much damaged.

Mr. Odell's wife was in Denver visiting a daughter. They were notified. The funeral will be held Thursday afternoon. Mr. Odell had worked on the section for many years.
