

Liquor Floods Reservations, Court Is Told

Indian Officers Declare Bootleggers Supplying Fire Water to Redskins in Wholesale Quantities.

Omaha federal prohibition officers were given a shock Thursday in federal court when government Indian officers declared that the State Indian reservations are being flooded with liquor.

On top of this was the statement by state agents that in certain spots in Nebraska, bootlegging is on the increase.

Three cases were no sooner started than Federal Judge Woodrough took them from the jury and dismissed the defendants.

Reservations Flooded.

According to R. J. Hart, federal Indian officer who is attending court with seven other Indian officers, great quantities of liquor are being shipped into the state.

"We are having a time trying to dry up the reservation," said Hart. "Try as hard as we can we have been unable to locate the booze nests."

Hart stated that he probably would ask the assistance of local federal officers.

Samaridick Willing.

When asked whether he would aid Hart in the clean up of the Omaha and Winnebago reservations, Robert Samaridick stated that he would be only too glad to do so, but because of the large number of cases he has in federal court it would be some time before he could help.

Sheriff J. Jensen of Thurston county, who is attending court, admitted that liquor is being shipped into his county.

Case Dismissed.

Craven Anderson of Walthill, Neb., who was the first person dismissed by Woodrough, was besieged by friends as he left the court room. They asked him if he wouldn't sell some liquor on credit. Anderson was charged with sale of liquor to Dr. Moore, Henry Lemmon and Walter Gumm, state officers. The court sustained a motion to dismiss because payment for the liquor was not made until four days later.

Because of a faulty search warrant, John Raeger was dismissed. Officers seized an alleged still on his place near Walthill.

The last case was that of Mr. and Mrs. James Griffin, 1020 North Nineteenth street, accused with Leo Brunson of transporting liquor.

Finds No Evidence.

Judge Woodrough ruled that Brunson, who pleaded guilty, pay a $500 fine, $350 of it being put on execution. The Griffins, he stated, might be charged with conspiring but that there was no evidence of transportation.

Late Wednesday Henry J. Behrman, Omaha building contractor, was sentenced to serve 30 days in the county jail after a jury returned a verdict of guilty on a charge of violating the liquor laws.

Most Convenient Second Floor Entrance On Street Leads to Office of The Omaha Bee

Here's the new entrance to the Omaha Bee office. It is located on the west side of the Peters Trust building and faces Farnam street. The entrance is one of the most convenient to an upstairs office on the entire street. The glass-enclosed doorway with slanting roof above the steps insures all storm protection. A large electric sign hangs above the stairway. Only a few steps lead to the business office and editorial rooms of The Omaha Bee.

Folks seem possessed the whole world o'er To jump from trouble into more. —Danny Meadow Mouse.

Danny Meadow Mouse Escapes.

Danny Meadow Mouse was being carried away in an airplane, which he called a man-bird. No more frightened Meadow Mouse ever lived. He had peeped over the side and seen the earth, far, far, far below him. Then the wind had blown him back and he had scrambled into a tiny cupboard and buried himself in a bunch of cotton waste that was in it. He had become somewhat used to the terrible noise of the machine, so that it no longer frightened him as it did at first. But the thought of being way up in the air frightened him as he had never been frightened before.

For a long time Danny could think of nothing but that he was way up in the air and couldn't possibly get down until that great man-bird chose to come down. He didn't once think that he was being carried away from Nanny Meadow Mouse and the home he loved so much in the old scarecrow. When at that he did think of it he forgot everything else.

"Oh! Oh!" squeaked Danny. "Whatever is going to become of me? How will I ever get back home again? Oh, dear! Oh, dear me! This is the most dreadful thing that ever happened! Then a comforting thought came to him. "Perhaps," thought he, "this man-bird will return where it started from. Then everything will be all right." Danny brightened up at the thought.

It was the middle of the afternoon before anything happened. By that time Danny had become so used to the terrible noise of that man-bird that he really didn't mind it at all. When abruptly that noise ceased the stillness seemed so great as to be almost worse than the noise. Danny wondered what was going to happen. For what seemed a long time nothing happened. Then Danny felt a little

Look as he would, there wasn't a hiding place anywhere.

Jar beneath him, and presently that stopped. Then he heard the man who had sat there so long moving. Danny peeped out. The man was climbing out of the great man-bird. Danny's heart gave a great leap of joy. He guessed right away that the man-bird must have come down to earth, the dear, beloved earth, once more.

He heard the man busy about the man-bird for some time and he heard the voices of others gathered around, watching what the man was doing. Then, after a long, long time, all was still. Danny crept out of that tiny cupboard, climbed up to the edge of the man-bird and looked down. He expected to look down on the grass of the Green Meadows. Instead of that he looked down on nothing but bare ground. Never in all his life had he seen so much hard, bare ground. He knew instantly that he was not on the Green Meadows and a feeling of dismay filled his heart. But he was bound to get away from that dreadful man-bird, anyway. So he wasted no time, but climbed down to the ground.

Danny's one thought was of escape, of escape from that great man-bird. But when he was safely down on the ground and started to run away it came over him that he didn't know where to run to. Look as he would, there wasn't a hiding place anywhere. The fact is that airplane had landed in the middle of a great bare parade ground, near a fort, where there wasn't even a stick or a stone. Danny had escaped from the man-bird, but what should he do now?
