Proposal.

By Associated Press. Washington, Nov. 9 .- The British-American plan for an expert inquiry into Germany's capacity to pay reparations, in the opinion of the Washington government, has been frustrated and defeated by the attitude of France.

This view was made known officially at the State department late today, after Secretary Hughes and Ambassador Jusserand of France had conferred again and after it had been announced at the White House that Presidet Coonlidge believed the restricted iquiry desired by Premier Poincare would be useless. The ambassador is understood to have informed Secretary Hughes during his visit to the State department that the French premier was prepared to insist that the powers of the proposed expert committee should be broad enough to permit only of an inquiry of Germany's capacity to pay during the period ending with ambassador of the feeling of the Washington government that its purposes in suggesting an expert inquiry as a step toward solution of the reparations tangle would be frustrated by the French limitations. That apparent closed, for the present at least, the diplomatic conversations that have been proceeding between Washington and Paris.

It was indicated that the government here had no information as to the probable action of the allied governments in the circumstances. It is to be assumed, however, that the proposal to invite the United States will be dropped, since it could only meet with rejection in Washington
