

Big Ten Teams Hard at Work

Chicago, Nov. 13.—Western conference coaches today had their teams pointed toward the remaining games of the season, the outcome of which will determine the Big Ten championship.

At Madison the Wisconsin squad turned its attention to Michigan, whose conference hopes rest on a defeat of the Badgers on their home field Saturday.

Coach Yost has a battered squad of veterans to turn against the Badgers. As a result of the game with the U. S. Marines quarterback Uteritz is out of the game with a broken leg and other members of the squad are badly bruised.

"Red" Grange, whirlwind ace of the Illinois, who met rough treatment at the hands of Wisconsin on Saturday, is out for practice at Urbana and will be in shape for the only remaining conference game of his team, against Ohio, November 24.

Iowa and Minnesota are to give one of Saturday's feature exhibitions in the Big Ten. Both teams have had a week's rest and are reported to be prepared for a fierce battle.

Chicago came out of its game with Indiana Saturday intact and is getting ready for the contest against Ohio State on Saturday.

B Says "Bugs" Baer: THE GLUTT IS IN THE BAG

Rufftown Clerk Is in Trouble Trade and Will Throw Business Your Way.

THREE of the most influential football herds of the year are wintering at Cornell, Notre Dame and West Virginia.

But all of them refuse to play Rufftown university. So The Glutt was forced to play Jungle College last Saturday.

There has been much argument about what a gorilla could do to a man during office hours. That's the cream of the top of the hokum.

There are eleven gorillas playing on Jungle College and The Glutt went through 'em like a rabbit through a cabbage patch.

Science conquers brute calisthenics. Knowing the gorilla's ambition for coconuts, The Glutt substituted one for the football. Every time a Jungle gorilla caught hold of the ball he ate it instead of running with it.

Rufftown won the game by three hundred coconuts to nothing.

Which flattens the time-stained theory about a gorilla being able to go through a regiment of men like a hail storm through a paper roof.

The Glutt knocked out seven gorillas and chased the other four up into trees. He is so tough that he can make a porcupine shed its needles.

Next Saturday's game will be with the younger set in the Old Folks' Home. They have a good team this year, but The Glutt is a seamstress in an iron foundry. He sews rivets on boilers.

People rarely realize just how tough Rufftown surely is. The Glutt's grandmother is over a century in business. On her first visit to New York she was arrested by the police for mending her Sox with barbed wire.

The Glutt isn't bothered by lions and pumas. Even leopards leave him alone. They don't want to get the toothache.

On The Glutt's first play he broke his correct wrist. It was very painful. But he refused to get into an ambulance because the taximeter was fast.

A lily doesn't smell right to The Glutt unless he has a broken nose.

An earthquake tried to fool with Rufftown last Tuesday, but didn't get much patronage. An ordinary Rufftown dumbwaiter accident chased it out of town.

In the meantime The Glutt is holding eleven gorillas by the tails until some expert gives him an estimate on them.

Copyright, 1923.

Repairing L. A. Speedway
Los Angeles, Nov. 13.—A crew of 500 men is working at top speed on sections of the Beverly speedway, destroyed by fire last Saturday, and repairs are expected to be completed Friday, assuring the holding of the annual Thanksgiving day automobile race, a 250-mile contest in which prominent race drivers of the country will participate.

Watchmen armed with sawed off shotguns are said to be guarding the big bowl. Speedway officials hinted that investigation of the two recent fires which damaged the track pointed to incendiaries.

Wichita Gets Outfielder
Parry O'Brien, former Vernon outfielder of the Pacific Coast league, has been secured in a trade by Baldy Isbell, owner of the Wichita Western league club. O'Brien is said to be a fast outfielder, but not a powerful hitter.

Bowlers to Play by Wire
Omaha, Chicago and Denver will be represented in a telegraph bowling match to be staged by teams of the Western Union telegraph company at the Omaha alley Saturday night at 7:30. The match is for a purse of $300.

STOUT PERSONS
Incline to full feeling after eating, gassy pains, constipation. CHAMBERLAIN'S TABLETS
Cleansing and comforting - only 25c

RUPTURE
Established 1884. I have a successful treatment for Rupture without resorting to a painful and uncertain surgical operation. My treatment has more than twenty-five years of success behind it, and I claim it to be the best. I do not inject any fine wax, as it is dangerous. Time required for ordinary cases, 10 days spent here with me. No danger of leaving up in a hospital. Call or write for particulars, Dr. Frank H. Wray, No. 807 North 35th St., Omaha, Neb. Directions: Take a 15th or 16th street car going north and get off at 25th and Cumine Sts. Third residence south.

EDDIE'S FRIENDS

The Wife Calls Up

Copyright, 1923, by NEA. Feature Service, Inc. 11-14

HAVE YOU GOOD NICKNAME FOR CREIGHTON ATHLETIC TEAMS?

Have you mailed in your nickname for the Creighton athletic teams? If you haven't, better get busy for the contest closes pretty soon.

Remember, the person or persons who mail in the nickname that the board of athletics at Creighton selects as the best nickname for the selection.

Nickname.....
Name.....
Address.....
School, if any.....

Salt Lake City, Nov. 13.—Johnny Adamson, Denver junior welterweight, lost the decision in six rounds to Frankie Darren of Logan, Utah, here last night. Darren floored the Denver boxer in the first round and while Adamson knocked Darren down twice he was badly outpointed by Harry Brammer, also of Denver, who floored the Denver boxer in the seventh round. Adamson was knocked out by Johnny Woodmansee, local lightweight, in one round. Brammer had Woodmansee in distress from the start.

Chicago, Nov. 13.—Ernie Goetzman, Los Angeles fighter, outpointed Hille Levine of New York in a 10-round fight at East Chicago tonight in the opinion of newspaper men at the ringside. Goetzman knocked Levine down in the seventh round. Levine fought at 122 pounds. In the semi-windup, Bill Henry of Chicago defeated Mike O'Dowd of Munich, who in a 10-round bout at 126 pounds.

Tommy Ryan, the speedy McKeesport, Pa., lightweight, who has whipped practically every good one in the 113-pound class, is about to deposit $1,000 to meet Al Goldstein in New York, who the winner to box Joe Lynch. Ryan has won verdicts over Terry Martin, Irish Johnny Curtis, Young Montreal, Harry London, and other good ones. He also beat Joe Burman, Larry Goldberg, Pat Moore, Roy Moore, etc. in newspaper decisions. Hattie Shannon, Buffalo promoter, is managing Ryan.

John W. Dyas and "Lucky" Kennedy, passenger agents for the Michigan Central and Milwaukee railroads, respectively, accompanied the Creighton university football team to East Lansing and return last week.

"Theosophical Society Lectures"
by MRS. HARRIET TUTTLE BARTLETT
National Lecturer for the "American Theosophical Society"
NEW THEOSOPHICAL HALL
201 Arthur Bldg. 210 S. 18th.
Wednesday, Nov. 8:15 P. M.—"The Message of the Great Pyramid of Egypt?"
Thursday, Nov. 15, 8:15 P. M.—"Problem of the Child of the New Age."
Friday, Nov. 16, 8:15 P. M.—"The Simplicity of Theosophic Life."
Sunday, Nov. 18, 8:15 P. M.—"Death and After."
ADMISSION FREE
Collection

When in Omaha Stop at Hotel Rome

BRANDEIS THEATRE
TODAY AND ALL WEEK
Matinee Today and Saturday
John Golden's Record-Breaking Comedy Success
the 1st Year
A Comic Tragedy of Married Life
PRICES:
Nights, 50c to $2.50. Matinee Today to $1.50. Sat. Mat., 50c to $2.00.

EMPRESS THIS WEEK
A Sensation
The Big Comedy Success
"Flo-Flo"
With Thelma Fraley
Added Attractions
Dorothy Dalton
in "Dark Secrets"
New Series
Fighting Blood
Stories

SUN NOW SHOWING
A. S. M. Hutchinson's
World Famous Story
"If Winter Comes"

WORLD NOW PLAYING
All Feature
7 Act Bill
of Standard Vaudeville
in Addition to Photoplays

MOON This Week Ending Fri.
"The Drivin' Fool"
Thrilling Auto Story
SATURDAY
"The Midnight Alarm"

Gaiety Omaha's Fun Center
Mat and Nite Today
From the Citadel of Culture and Refinement
CHARLES COLUMBIA
WALDRON'S Bostonians BURLESK
Eclipses All in Fun. Frolic, spectacle, Song
Extra 10 Minutes
Added: 10 "Raided" Dixie Jazzhounds
WOW! COLORED ACT ON EARTH
Ladies' 25c Bargain Mat., 2:15 Wk. Days
Mat. Mat., Wk.: J. Reid's Record Breakers

NEIGHBORHOOD THEATERS
GRAND ALL STAR CAST in
"THE SPIDER AND THE ROSE"

"New Champion in 1924," Says Tyrus R. Cobb

New York, Nov. 13.—Tyrus Cobb, manager of the Detroit Tigers, spending a few days on Broadway, does not think that Miller Huggins and his Yankees can possibly repeat as pennant winners in 1924. Cobb points out that no major league club has been able to win the flag four times in a row and does not think the Yankees will be able to break down this tradition. Of course, Cobb feels that the team which will nose out the Yankees comes from Detroit.

Burgess Bedtime Stories
By THORNTON W. BURGESS.
The greatest joy of those who roam is found at last in getting home.
—Danny Meadow Mouse.
Danny Gets a Glad Surprise.
Danny Meadow Mouse was leading a strange life. Day after day he was carried up high in the blue, blue sky in a great man-bird, as he and all the other little people called an airplane. Danny had learned to enjoy flying. True he was a prisoner, but he didn't mind this very much. He sometimes did wish that his cage was big enough for him to run in. But he never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs could take him. Right in front of him was a little path. Danny squeaked aloud with joy. It was one of his own little paths. There wasn't a doubt about it, it was one of his own little paths. He was back on the Green Meadows where he had been born.

How Danny did race along that little path! Straight over to the cornfield he ran, and then straight on to the old scarecrow. He was home! Yes, sir, he was home! It was too good to be true, but it was true. It seemed as if his little heart would burst with joy. How he did hope that Nanny Meadow Mouse was in their home in the heart of that old scarecrow. Then as he climbed up, for him all of a sudden, and he scrambled up faster than ever.

(Copyright, 1923.)
The next story: "Danny Becomes a Sort of Hero."

never suffered for lack of food, and he was always safe. He had grown to be quite fond of the man who flew that man-bird.

Of course, Danny often thought of Nanny Meadow Mouse, and he wondered what she was doing and if she was still living in their home in the old scarecrow in Farmer Brown's cornfield. "She thinks I'm dead," thought Danny. "She thinks I have been caught by Reddy Fox, or Blacky Pussycat, or Old Man Coyote, or some one else who is always looking for Meadow Mice. I don't suppose I'll ever see her again." Danny grew very sad.

Then there came a day when they flew longer than usual. Danny could see jolly, round, red Mr. Sun getting very close to the Purple Hills, and he began to wonder if they were going to fly by night as well as by day. But at last they began to go down, down, down, down. It didn't seem as if they were going down, down. It seemed as if the earth was coming up to meet them. Nearer and nearer drew the earth. Danny saw a cornfield. His heart gave a great bound, for near the edge of that cornfield was an old scarecrow. The noise of the engine stopped. Very gently the great man-bird landed, ran a little way, and then was still.

Danny's friend climbed out of the man-bird. Then he reached in and took Danny's cage out. He set it down on the grass. "Well, little chap," said he, "we're back again. We are back right where I suspect I caught you that if I had a chance I would bring you back, and here you are. I hate to let you go because I've grown very fond of you,

but I guess you will be happier at home."

With this he opened a little door in the cage and left it open. Then he stepped back and watched. Danny didn't know what to make of it. He poked his nose out. Then he realized that that cage was open, and he hurried out as fast as his short legs