Graves Bros. Players

Are One Happy Family; Many in Troup Over Year

Joys, sorrows, relatives and "in-laws" are shared by a group of actors and actresses with Graves Brothers players now at the Empress theater, for the principals of the show have been one big family for more than a year. The players have a mother to whom they can tell their troubles. She is Mrs. S. C. Lowry, grandmother of Gertrude Lowry, a member of the company. Other members of this group of players, who have the unusual record of playing together for more than a year without serious breaks, quarrels or departures from the ranks, are: Thelma Fraley, Palmer Hines, Irene Hardy, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Kinslow, Mr. and Mrs. James Hollis, Brunau Hollis, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Richter. The family pet is a Pekinese dog.

Mr. Richter, who is musical director of the production, is a native of Plattsmouth, Neb. He was born there 31 years ago and has never returned there since his departure when he was a small child. Mr. Hines, the producer, is planning to motor to Plattsmouth on Monday with Mr. Richter, so that the former resident can see if old landmarks still stand and "if the same police force is in action."

Jack Reid's "Record Breakers" will be at the Gaiety theater one week, starting this afternoon. Songs, dances, monologues and instrumental music will be liberally interspersed throughout the two hours of music and music. The bill will include Jack Reid and Tim Healy in "The Record Breakers," being Martin in "Jazz Sings," the Princess Dever in "Keychain Dances," Bert and Pauline in "Whirling Dances" and Bill Conway, the Black Span, in negro comedy. Made famous in an original "Mersey Perry in funny songs and sayings, Anna Elise as a comedienne, Betty Gilbert in unique characterizations, Betty Belmont and Emily Keller. "The Record Breakers" following the policy of a daily change in the program. Tomorrow's matinee starts at 2:30.

"La Petite Revue," with cast of Broadway beauties heads the seven-act bill at the World today. The supporting bill is of a comedy nature with plenty of musical trimming. Sullivan and Myers present an automobile novelty, Davis and McCoy offer "Theology," Jack and Sinton make their first local appearance as a vaudeville duo, Beck and Stone sing comedy songs. Other acts include Harry Holman, Dix and Powers and Arthur Hays.

"Not Tonight, Dearie" opens a seven-day engagement at the New Empress theater today. The supporting bill is given an elaborate presentation by the Graves Brothers players. The various musical numbers are in keeping with the spirit and snap of "Not Tonight, Dearie." Four shows are given today and tomorrow, with performances continuous starting Monday evening. Two Fighting Blood stories and Alice Brady in "The Leopard" are the screen features.

Announcement is made by the management of the Brandeis theater that the comic tragedy of married life, "The First Year," which has been delighting the patrons of the Brandeis theater all this week, will not only play the two performances today, matinee and evening, but will remain for a special and final performance tomorrow night.

"During the three acts of 'The First Year' it provides about two laughs a minute, on a conservative estimate, and the fun is continuous until the fall of the final curtain. Every variety of laugh is said to be coaxed from the audience, from the refined snigger that is afraid to be heard, to the hearty shout that doesn't give a whoop."

Chas. G. Maynard, composer of "Listen Irene," "Eve," and now George E. Wint's new spectacular production, "Venus," which is due at the Brandeis theater Friday and Saturday of next week, is unique among the fabricators of musical comedy scores. He is unable to read a note of music, yet his efforts have enjoyed a phenomenal sale, both in sheet form and in phonograph records. Maynard gained his knowledge of melody from playing the banjo drum in the loudspeaker of the River Corbett band. Coming to New York several years ago, his compositions immediately found favor with the lovers of popular airs.

Religious Differences Great Love Barrier

Confident Girl Known Man in Question Two Weeks—Will Become Engaged if Religious Differences Can Be Wiped Out.

By MARTHA ALLEN.

Here's a girl who has known a certain man for only two weeks and she expects to become engaged to him. Not all of us are so sure of the future. The closing argument before a decision is made seems to be about religion. He is a Roman Catholic and she a Protestant. Her family are very much opposed to the Catholic religion. The young man offered just once to change his religion. Sometimes affairs can be adjusted so that there will be little trouble about religion, but again this vital question can cause more difficulties than any other. If there is little sympathy on the part of the girl for the young man's religion, there will be quarrels upon the subject, you may be quite sure, and if her parents are opposed to his religious beliefs there is positive to be a general upheaval. Better be safe than sorry in a case like this one. It would seem fairly easy to give up the young man of only two weeks acquaintance. A pile of trouble will be avoided by being courageous enough to follow the dictates of the mind and not the heart.

A "One-Man" Girl.

Dear Martha Allen—I have come to you for advice before and I have gloried in it as I am sure many others have done. I am going to try to give you my feelings in regard to certain man, three years my senior. I kept steady company with him six years ago and now I long for his company. I was too young to go with boys steadily as I am only 21 years old now, but I went with him secretly as girls will do. My mother found it out and warned me, after which I soon quit. Many times in the next two years, he asked for a date but I refused him. Finally I snubbed him so that he would not bother me again. My plan worked too well. For the next three years we seldom spoke but I often thought of him. We are finally speaking again and he treats me with the utmost respect. On several occasions we have talked of former days when we were classmates but never mention our affair. Do you think I love the man or is it infatuation? I have never been able to content myself in the company of other men although I have had and still have plenty of unwelcome admirers. My parents still dislike this man because of a disgrace a brother placed on the family name. This man himself has been pretty lively and there has been gossip, but I agree with other girls who have gone with him that the gossip is untrue.

I try to treat this man as he treats me but I do not want to give him the impression that I am running after him as I realize how all men take that. But, I am sure that I love him and I want him back. What shall I do? I have spent lonesome hours because of matter of choice and my thoughts are almost constantly of him. I hope you'll not advise me to go with other men and forget this one for I've tried it six years and it can't be done. What shall I do considering my parents dislike him and the fact that he has never asked me for a date. I think he hesitates because I have snubbed him.

LONESOME.

This man seems to be playing his cards well in winning you. Indifference is sometimes the best way to push the young girls on in the game of hearts. I wouldn't be so susceptible if I were you, Lonesome. Such a winning personality as he seems to have is sometimes an excellent cloak for a bad character. Parents are usually fairly good judges on account of their years of experience in this wicked world. Don't be caught by a tricky game of pseudo devotion. If you do have the opportunity to go with him be on your guard and play just as good a game as he does. Be careful and in time you'll be able to find out just what the real man is that you have dreamed about. It may be still a fancy of childhood. The man may have a good deal of pride and will not ask you to go out with him because of your former treatment. If he cared as much as you think you do, he will bury it in time and come back. Your friendliness toward him would indicate that you wish to forget past hard feelings.

If there is a personal problem on which you need advice or assistance, Martha Allen is at your service. Letters are answered in the column daily as soon after their receipt as possible. Names of writers are not published and all communications are treated in confidence. Address Martha Allen, The Omaha Bee.

"Fit out the boys and give them the best you have. Many years ago, when I left home, I was admonished to put my best foot forward and keep it there by ever remembering my appearance. My boys are getting the same admonition. This Father and Son Week celebration is a good time to drive home the truth that 'good clothes are an investment,' said a customer in our boys' shop."
