Market Big Need.

"The fundamental need of the farmer is a satisfactory market. By satisfactory, I mean a market that will not only take the farmer's products but take them at a price sufficiently above the cost of production to give him a good living with his fair share serve as an automatic regulator, because they absorb any excess of manpower on the farms, and thus establish a fair balance between what it costs the farmer to produce his crops and what he gets for them. Prosperity in the towns and cities, moreover, means an abundant supply of the things the farmer needs to buy, just as a good market means that the farmer will have money to buy them. "In the second place, the farmer needs a better market abroad. We can help to get it in two ways.
