Man Complains No Thrifty Girls to Be Found

Says They're All After Money, Only Pleasure-Bent—He Runs to Popular Type—Hasn't Looked for Sensible Ones.

By MARTHA ALLEN.
"ARE there any girls nowadays who are willing to give up anything for the sake of marriage?" writes B. R. T. No girl is to be found it seems who really cares for a man who isn't making a big enough salary to keep her in a better home than she has lived in for 20 years, he asserts. "No girl cares a thing about me except for the money I spend. They all seem to think that men should dig down in their pockets continually. They say that it is foolish to marry on less than $50 a week. The point is, that it is the $20 a week girls who think this way. They don't like to go out with a fellow unless he has an auto, buys tickets to the theater and has a dinner party once in a while. At $12 a week for one date it seems pretty hard to save for marriage. It is out of fashion for a girl to invite a man to her home for an evening visit."

This man has been sadly mistreated by the fairer sex. He has been unfortunate in the type of girls he has met. That class are "gold diggers" in the making and are proud of getting all they can for smiling upon the young man in tow. Their graciousness must be bought and paid for. Such girls have adopted pleasure as the idol of their hearts. They care nothing about the man they happen to be with this evening or that evening, their only aim is to have money lavished upon them.

However, the young man who "dates" with these girls is at just as much fault. She is the type the average salaried young man prefers. The men are attracted by the very qualities which work such havoc with their salaries. They seem to like the girl who is pleasure-bent and who wears clothes of the latest mode. A girl who is not so decorative, who has a leaning toward the frigid side of the home, is not so popular. If the man who has simple tastes would seek the companionship of a more plain and wholesome girl he would find the girl who would be willing to plan and help him save. Some girls have set this standard of popular demand. There are plenty of nice girls, sweet girls and pretty girls, who are thrifty and capable and who are dreaming of a day when they can use these qualities in helping a man to succeed.

To Attend Army and Navy Game Saturday.

Miss Dorothy Lord, who is specializing in English this year at St. Mary's Episcopal school in Peeskill, N. Y., will attend the Army and Navy game in New York Saturday. She will be the guest for the weekend of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Rising, former Nebraskans.

The Misses Catherine and Dorothy Spiece of Columbus, Neb., students at Arden school, Lakewood, N. J., will also attend the Army and Navy game.

Dinner for Mrs. Chapin.
Mrs. Frank Bender will be a dinner hostess at her home Saturday night for Mrs. Horace Chapin of Batavia, N. Y., guest of her sister, Mrs. Earl Sterricker.

Mrs. Drexel Honored.
Mrs. Barton Clough entertained at luncheon Wednesday for Mrs. H. C. Drexel, whose marriage took place a week ago.

Mrs. Charles Hitch entertained at bridge Tuesday afternoon for 16 guests, honoring her mother, Mrs. Drexel.

Letover Cauliflower.
Can be distributed into ramekins dividing the cream sauce as well as the cauliflower, and cheese grated over the top of each one. Finish with salt, pepper and a generous amount of butter and bake until the cheese is rich and brown.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Bess Dean Had News of Mrs. Durkee's Hospital Trip

Lella Durkee stood motionless for several seconds after her pettish little outburst at me and my grave rejoinder. Then she flung her arms around me in swift, irresistible contrition.

"I'm a little beast, Madge," she said penitently, and you ought to thrash me soundly. I can't think what makes me act like this. "I can," I said significantly, remembering the whispered confidence she had given me a few days before, and deciding swiftly that perhaps a consideration of her own personal hopes and fears would most quickly banish her nervous tremors concerning her husband's mother.

Her cheeks were suddenly like crimson roses and she hid her face against my shoulder. I stroked her shining hair until at last she raised her head and spoke with gentle dignity. "I mustn't take refuge behind—that," she said honestly. "It's just my own weakness and pettiness. But I am sorry, Madge, dear, and I'll try to do my part from now on, you'll see."

I took her by the shoulders and swayed her gently to and fro. "You foolish kitten," I scolded, "nobody has said or thought that you have been doing anything else. I've simply tried to make you stop worrying yourself sick. And it is I who should ask pardon of you, but I'm not going to, for we've too much on hand. Tell me, did I take the right dish-towels? I found them in this drawer."

Keeping Lella Busy
From that minute I kept her wrapped in housewifely details as if they were so many blankets, and it was not until, with Katherine's admonition in mind, I had exhausted every plausible pretext for delay in our return that she found any opportunity for speech upon anything more emotional than the counting and wrapping of the silver which we were to carry to the bank in Freeport before our departure. It was when we had finished this last detail and were putting on our wraps that she said with shy embarrassment:

"Do you know, Madge, I—haven't told Alf—"

She did not finish the sentence. It was cut short by a peremptory ring of the doorbell. Lella's hand went quickly to her heart with an unconsciously dramatic gesture, and her face lost its delicate color. "That is Bess Dean's ring," she said. "Madge, it is like an omen, that girl coming here just now, when I was speak—"

"It's an omen we'll soon dispose of," I returned shortly, for the prospect of seeing the girl who with malicious deliberation was causing my little friend so much unhappiness aroused every combative instinct within me. "Just leave her to me."

The Unwelcome Visitor.
"Oh! if you only would keep her from talking to me," Lella breathed. "Watch me," I promised, as I went to the hall door and swung it open. "Hello, Bess!" I said cordially. "Did the principal excuse you or have you a half holiday?"

"Neither," she replied with an airy toss of the head. "I never waste a minute of my precious time staying in a classroom as you'll remember. And I'm on my way to Lynbrook, so I thought I'd run in between trains." "It's too bad you wasted it coming over here," I said with apparent sympathy. "Lella and I are just starting for Freeport. We expect a taxi any minute. Sorry we're going in the opposite direction from you, or we would offer you a lift."

I was thankful indeed that she had preferred the obvious tarradiddle of a trip to Lynbrook. The trains in the afternoon were altogether too far apart for stops between trips, but her flimsy pretext for the call which I was sure she had meant to extend until the usual time for Alfred's homecoming had given me a golden opportunity. "Thanks for the offer, anyway." She gave me a scornful, comprehending glance, and then with a doleful drooping of her facial muscles asked lugubriously: "But what's this I hear about dear Mother Durkee's going to the hospital?" Lella's eyes flashed a swift fierce question to mine. "How had Bess Dean heard this news unless Alfred had told her?"

For Mrs. McVann's ostesses. Mrs. A. V. Kinsler will entertain at tea at her home Saturday afternoon for the hostesses to Mrs. E. J. McVann of Washington, D. C., during her several weeks visit here with Mrs. Margaret J. Hynes and Mrs. Thomas Flynn. Mrs. McVann leaves Sunday for her home.

Fruit popovers are excellent served with a sauce for dessert.
