

School Head Surveys Work

Beverage Defends Tech High Expenditures in Talk on "Education." The public schools of Omaha represent an investment of $14,216,044.38, and cost about $3,600,000 annually, according to Superintendent Albert J. Beveridge in giving a survey of "Education in Omaha" at the noon luncheon of the Professional Men's Club in the palm room of the Hotel Fontaine Monday.

Considerable time was spent by Mr. Beveridge in defense of the expenditures on Technical High school. "A technical high school inevitably costs more than an academic high school, but our new Technical High building costs less per pupil than many high schools in other Nebraska towns. We are told by architects and experts in school buildings that we have in the Omaha schools, although not the most imposing, high school in the world. Every bit of it is intended for use, and when you visit the building I do not believe you will be able to find one cubic foot of waste space in its construction."

Mr. Beveridge invited anyone interested in the public schools to come to the superintendent's office and look over the method of handling the finances. One has no right to criticize the administration of the schools until he has made such an investigation, said the superintendent.
