Vernelle Head to Wear Paris Trousseau Here

"Life in Paris for me will not be so vastly different from the life I have led in Omaha," said Miss Vernelle Head, who returned this morning from a month's visit abroad with the family of her fiance, Raymond A. Baur, whom she is to wed January 3.

"For instance," she went on, "I will still speak English for the most part. There are 100,000 Americans in Paris—my fiance belongs to American as well as French clubs, and though we will be in continual contact with the French and will speak their tongue with them, with ourselves we will continue the use of English."

Omaha is not to be deprived of seeing Miss Head's trousseau. "For she says, 'my trousseau resolves itself simply into my winter wardrobe. The only gowns I will not wear many times before I leave, are my bridal and rehearsal dinner costumes. My linens I left in Paris, but I will give a trousseau tea later.'"

Miss Head spent her month in Paris in prenuptial gaieties, and in selecting and furnishing an apartment. "An adorable one," she tells us. "Done in the French manner, that is to say, the furniture is very much lighter and more frivolous in effect than ours, and the drapes are in keeping. We will be on the ground floor which is very nice, when you consider that apartment houses there are for the most part, six stories high. It is on the Rue Georges Ville."

Entertaining there is much the same as ours. It is on a more intense scale, however. The women in Paris go in more for the intellectual and for musical things, for of course they have unlimited advantages. Dinners are usually part of a "soiree." A small group dine with the hostess, and many more guests join them afterwards, for the inevitable bridge and music. "Ever so much more exciting than our evening bridges." The luncheons are the same as those in Omaha, but the nicest teas are never "standup affairs." One goes, and is seated at a very large table, and conversation is, of course, general.

Mr. Baur will arrive in Omaha December 28, and after their marriage he and Miss Head will honeymoon on the Riviera, before going to Paris to live.

Life Worth Living

Electricity is to the American Home what religion is to the man. It makes life really worth living.

Nothing is more wonderful than a comfortable chair, a child in your arms, a book of children's rhymes and the soft rays of an electric lamp.

Seated there, the child receives the knowledge which forms the foundation of its later life.

For the American Home, Electricity has done much more. It has placed pleasures in the house where only drudgery had existed.

The vacuum cleaner, electric washing machine, electric iron, toaster, grill and stove have brought many conveniences and pleasures.

There is an added pleasure in the use of electricity in Omaha—because of the extremely low rate—one of the very lowest in all America.
