By O. O. McINTYRE. New York, Nov. 29.—In West proceedings to obtain Wesley Memor-Forty-seventh street is Bootmaker's ial Methodist church auditorium for Row. Here fashionable New York the program here tomorrow night goes to be shod. Perhaps the most celebrated bootmaker the town ever knew was James Moore. Three of his sons are now working at the bench who was expected to arrive here in their own shops.

The boot shops are unpretentious, dimly lighted, and polished pots hang over the flickering fireplaces just as they did in the days when New York was a village with flagstone walks, men in velvet pants and dairy maids who carried three-legged stools.

Many of them have no signs out-side. Only a finished boot in the window denotes the calling. Their customers are those whose parents were served by the bootmaker's parents. his work and he never sends out bills. During the war the hand-made boot sold for $60 a pair, but now the price has declined to $40. The bootmaker will not promise his finished work in less than a month, and sometimes it will be six weeks before they are delivered-always in person by the

Despite the fact that they do not keep in step with the rushing world about them, I am told that nearly all of the bootmakers are men of independent fortunes, and one has avily invested in real estate that has quadrupled in the past quarter of a century. There are also on Forty-seventh street several old-time saddlery shops. They cater to the fashionable patrons of the riding academies and cling to the traditions in the same manner as

What one misses most in New York are the characters who make the small town so interesting. There appear to be no itinerant whitewashers or fiddlers. There are no lovable old fellows-tender, simple souls who whittle ships inside bottles, play tunes on peach leaves and recite poems to the children. In our town Whitewash Joe was beloved. Remmerich, who has had amazing results from his prophecies based on his system of historical calculations on the periodicity of parallelisms, also has warned former Crown Prince Wilhelm, now at Oels, that if he gives way in a weak moment to bad advice and allows himself to be proclaimed king of Prussia or kaiser of Germany. he will surely end on the gallows or by execution on the firing line.

CHINESE BANDITS SEIZE $500,000

Shanghai, Nov. 29.-In the biggest robbery in the history of China, six armed Chinese bandits today held up a messenger of the Tungyih bank, enroute to the Stock Exchange bank, in the heart of the international settlement, and escaped with $500,000 in negotiable bonds. One bandit upset the ricksha in which the bank messenger was riding, another grabbed the packages containing the bonds, while a third stood guard with drawn revolvers. The bandits escaped in a waiting automobile. This is the second autonobile bandit robbery in China.
