Many Cases Home and Career for Women on Account of Economic Problems

Regardless of Arguments Against Such Situations Hundreds of Women Are Accomplishing the Feat—Only the Strength of the Individuals Tested.

By MARTHA ALLEN.

Love and a career can both be attained if the effort is made for them. The right sort of woman can hold a job and make a home for a husband too, contrary to many theories set forth and ideas expounded in such books as, "This Freedom." Some of the high executives in the business world are women and these very women have attractive homes with contented husbands. It all depends upon the individuals who are to make the home and upon certain conditions. The task is a hard one for the woman. Such a condition may not be ideal but it is quite prevalent. A career or a home may be neglected just a little on either side but not enough to wreck the happiness of companionship. A true partnership can never be broken up even under trying circumstances.

If the husband and wife take a keen interest in each other's work there need be no fear of the safety of the home. Training children, forming the domestic end of the marriage-partnership are the normal things for a woman to do, but economic conditions do not always permit. Perhaps there is a mother to support or a small brother to put through school. Why should the altar of sacrifice be piled high? One sacrifice is enough. Happiness can be found in one way while sacrifice is made in the other. Conditions provide an answer to each problem. After all, making a favorite salad for the husband or backing a special

Anderson are the heads of committees.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Dr. Braithwaite Brought News of the Operation.

"We'd love to have you come with us," I ventured, when Alfred, Lella, Dicky and I had reached the street door of the hospital where little Mrs. Durkee awaited the morrow's ordeal of a surgical operation. "I know you would," Alfred returned, "but we must be as close to the hospital as we can get for the next day or two. We have rooms already engaged at that little hotel on the corner."

"Whither I shall soon descend upon you with that bag of Lella's I left at the apartment," Dicky interposed. "Come, Madge, let's beat it."

A Restless Night.
"Suppose you beat it," Alfred suggested, "and leave Madge with us until you get it?"

"As a hostage, eh?" Dicky laughed. "Well, I suppose my reputation does justify such a claim. Don't worry, Madge, I'll redeem you within the half hour."

He was as good as his word. Indeed it was five minutes less than the time named when he appeared at the door of the tiny suite—sitting room, bedroom and bath—which Alfred had secured. We remained but a minute or two afterward, only waiting to assist to Alfred's promise that we meet them at the hospital early the next morning.

"That poor girl looks as if he had a ticket to the heated regions and no return check," Dicky commented, as we waited on the corner for a taxi. "It's selfish, but I certainly am glad I'm not in his shoes. Suppose it were mother the night or you"—the last word with an explosiveness which gave me a comforting sense of his real affection for me, in spite of his Peter Pan wanderings.

reached the apartment and was asleep in five minutes. But it was after midnight before I lost myself in slumber, and the rest of the night was a succession of fitful dozes, shot through with fantastic, contorted dreams.

Unrefreshed, with a throbbing head and jerky nerves, I awakened early, and after preparing a breakfast, which I could only pretend to eat in order to deceive Dicky, I went with him to the hospital. Purposely we reached there earlier than the hour Alfred had named, in order that Lella might not be left to herself in the reception room even for a few minutes. She came in with her husband a few minutes later, and the relief upon Alfred's face royally rewarded us for the effort.

"You people are the salt of the earth," he said fervently. "I won't be long, sweetheart," he turned to Lella. "You know they're only going to let me stay a few minutes."

"Never mind me, dear," she answered with a brave attempt to hide the trembling of her lips. "I shall be all right, now that Madge is here."

Waiting for the News.
Dicky walked with Alfred as far as the elevator, and then came back to us for the tense quarter of an hour which elapsed before Alfred, pallid, visibly shaken, but holding himself in an iron grip, entered the reception room.

"Are they—?" Lella began tremulously. "They have just taken her into the operating room," he answered quietly.

"Did Dr. Braithwaite say how long?" Dicky queried. "He doesn't know, but it will be nearly an hour, at best, before they can tell us anything—unless—"

Dicky did not permit him to finish that sentence. "Well, then," he said, "there isn't the slightest use of all of us sitting around here. Madge, I'll call a limousine and you and Lella drive around for an hour. You've probably got some shopping or something that you can do. I'll stay here with Alf, and we can walk around the block and smoke. What do you say?"

"That it's a splendid scheme," I returned. "Come, Lella, let's look for those handkerchiefs your mother-in-law wished us to purchase."

She agreed listlessly, but she gave me no trouble on the drive, and when we returned to the hospital reception room, we found Dr. Braithwaite, visibly worn, with Dicky and Alfred on either side of him, and were just in time to hear him say:

"She's all right. Operation a success, heart in fine condition, things not as bad as I feared, although they were bad enough, but you have every right to be hopeful as to the future. And you"—to Alfred—"probably will be able to see her for a minute or two this afternoon—Madge! quick!"

I did not need the warning. I had been watching Lella closely and my arms caught her fragile figure as she swooned against me.

Yellow Cab

Sells service

We never weary talking about our drivers. On their skill, integrity and faithfulness depends the success of our business and we appreciate it.

No cab company in this country ever achieved enduring prosperity until the "human equation," as represented by the men at the wheel, had been solved. The answer was not found in rules and regulations, but in "a square deal for the worker."

The public is entitled to many things from the right kind of cab system. It is personal service of the most exacting nature and the YELLOW CAB driver is our most important and only contact with the cab patron.

The men who pioneered the way into the modern cab business were sympathetic and broad-minded. Rules were abolished in favor of "intelligent co-operation." "Musts" and "Don'ts" went down before a sincere desire by every employee to serve.

We have frankly copied those pioneers. We have profited by their experience—now the basis of every modern YELLOW CAB system in the United States. We would rather imitate well than originate poorly.

And so we like to tell you about our drivers, for we are honestly proud of them. We have spent time and money in gathering together a group of high-class men whose happiness and prosperity is as much our concern as the success of this business.

MRS. HINGKLEY NERVOUS WRECK
Tells How She Was Restored to Perfect Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Memphis, Tenn.—"Two years ago I was completely run-down and my nerves were a wreck. I could not sweep a room without resting. I could not do my work except a little at a time, and the doctor's medicine did not help me. One day some one threw your little book on to my porch, and in it I read several testimonials of women who had been like myself. I went right out and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken the whole of that bottle I knew it was helping me. I took six bottles, and then in about three months I took two more. Now I am in perfect health. I do all of my own work and could do more. I can truly say that I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gave me my health."
—Mrs. O. J. HINGKLEY, 316 Union Ave., Memphis, Tenn.
