FRENCH POLICY IS CRITICIZED

Gen. Maurice Says France Minimizes Value of England.

By MAJ. GEN. SIR F. B. MAURICE.

London, Nov. 30.—The Paris Figaro recently gave prominence to an article which declares that the entente with England is not of any value to France, and if England had declared itself in time in 1914 there would have been no war.

This last is an old fallacy, still believed in England by some people. The facts are that at the end of July, 1914, the military party in Germany was in the ascendant and that party did not believe that our effort could affect the issue. Whether the kaiser did or did not call the little British army "contemptible" there is no doubt that the military leaders in Germany thought of it in that light.

Von Tirpitz says in his memoirs, that he asked the German general staff whether the German navy should attempt to prevent the dispatch of troops from England to France, and he received a reply that it was not only unnecessary for the German navy to take risks for that end, but that it would be a positive advantage to Germany if our army should come to France and be mopped up with the French army.

Admits Miscalculations.

Von Moltke, in the papers recently published by his widow, admits his miscalculations and says sadly:

"France has to thank England for the rapid help which she received from that country, that she was not overwhelmed in the first rush."

We knew from Von Kluck's book that the Germans thought it would take us about 10 days longer than it actually did to land troops in France, and that they were completely surprised by our presence at Mons, where we saved the French from annihilation. All the evidence goes to show that if we had declared openly, in July, 1914, that we would fight on the side of France, war would not have been prevented, because the German soldiers thought they could knock the French out before England could intervene effectually.

The evidence also goes to show that if we had mobilized on the same days as France, and sent our six divisions across the channel, it would have made no difference to the course of events in August, 1914, for that course was dictated by the failure of the French plan, which was based wholly on incorrect data.

The one course that might have postponed the war, but not prevented it, would have been that we should, before the summer of 1914, have entered into a hard and fast defensive and offensive alliance with France. Such an alliance would have been politically impossible, and would not have had the result of bringing a united empire into the war.

Ruinous for France.

I hope the writer in the Figaro will think again. As Von Moltke says, our entente with France saved it in 1914. I believe with Lord Grey that friendship with France is as important for both of us and for Europe as it was in 1914, but it is more important for France than for us.

If we continue to drift apart as we are doing, if we start the competition of armaments, which they are already doing in Europe, it will be unpleasant for us, but it will be ruinous for France.

An expenditure of 17,000,000 pounds ($85,000,000) will put our aircraft on an equality with France. We can spend twice that if we have got to do it.

But we have not the least desire to do it, and that is why we welcome the movement in France, which is steadily gaining force, in favor of a policy which will give it both security and reparations, in place of a policy of adventure, which will give it neither.

UNWED MOTHER ASKS COURT AID

Seeks Levy on Inheritance of Man She Claims Child's Father.

Iowa courts have been asked to levy against a prospective $10,000 inheritance for the support of a child born 10 years ago in Council Bluffs.

Suit to this end was brought by Margaret McKinney of Shenandoah, Ia., in the district court at that place, against Harry W. Anderson, who is about to inherit $10,000 from the estate of his mother.

The child is Virginia Anderson McKinney, who, the petition alleges, is Anderson's child, although Anderson and Margaret McKinney were never joined in wedlock according to the laws of Iowa.

The mother says her child was born in Council Bluffs October 27, 1913, and has been in her care from that time. Mr. Anderson, she says, is in possession of considerable property. She asks the court to grant an order of attachment against the goods of the defendant, restraining him from disposing of them, as she believes he is about to do.

Judge E. B. Woodruff issued the writ.

SCHOOL PLANS POSTER EXHIBIT

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 30.—Students of wartime propaganda may view a fine collection in Yale university's school of art. Charles B. Whittlesey of New London, Conn., and Charles B. Whittlesey, jr., of Hartford, Conn., have just presented the university with 1,258 such posters, of which 577 were published by or in the United States. The remaining 681 represent work done in 35 foreign countries. Yale previously had 1,232 posters, but the new collection does not duplicate the old to any great extent. The art school will hold a public exhibition of the entire lot.
