He broke off in confusion, which with a sudden desire to laugh, for his ruse was a little too transparent. Sometime during our wordy battle he had become obessed with the idea that it was my own jealousy which was behind my animosity against Besa Dean, instead of concern for Lella. The discovery had appeased his anger and tickled his vanity, and his "confession" had been deliberately oncocted out of whole cloth to fan ny anger to a higher flame.

Quoting his own slangy parlance to myself I resolved grimly that he would get away with nothing like that;" and I finished his sentence with mocking little laugh. "I'd better expend my sympathy
